a bit of Disc and Data

Columbia Records Complete Score, Dialogue of
"THE MOST HAPPY FELLA."

On two of the warmest Sundays in May, when most New Yorkers were lolling in the park, visiting relatives, or doing the Times crossword puzzle at home, a large group of tense, talented people were convened at Columbia's 30th Studio in Manhattan to do the equivalent of six performances of "The Most Happy Fella." On hand were principals, Robert Weede and Jo Sullivan, composer Loesser and producer (Mrs.) Lynn Loesser. Twelve hours at the microphone, seven miles of tape, and 30 hours of editing finally yielded a three record set, also a single disc digest.

Possibly the busiest fella at the recording session was then-Executive Vice-President Goddard Lieberson, producer of all Columbia show albums—among them the spectacularly successful "My Fair Lady" (which incidentally, "The Most Happy Fella" had exceeded in advance orders before the first tape was taped!)

By managing to juggle simultaneously the artistic supervision of singers, orchestra, engineers—and opinion of composer, Loesser—producer Lieberson has given "The Most Happy Fella" the animation and breezy vitality of a theatre performance. Combined with this is the special and sharp focus a recording microphone can give to a song, a word, a nuance.

Much controversy rages around "The Most Happy Fella," concerning its musical form. Derived from the 31-year old Pulitzer Prize winning play by Sidney Howard, "They Knew What They Wanted," it has been described by its composer as a "musical comedy expanded, not an opera cut down." He further commented, "In 'The Most Happy Fella,' I found a rich playground in which to indulge both my integration and my Tin Pan Alley leanings."

Critics, less cryptic than Mr. Loesser, have hailed it as a "rare achievement—fine music drama!" (Atkinson—New York Times), "superb musical romance, superbly done!" (Chapman—New York Daily News) "an extraordinary American Opera—Opera Buf-fa! (Norton—Boston Post)

It does indeed have operatic arias, duets and quartets; Duets like the touching, "My Heart Is So Full of You," a quartet like "How Beautiful the Days," in which Robert Weede, Jo Sullivan, Mona Paulee, and Art Lund, together express the beauty of the days in the Napa Valley, and at the same time, their own individual loneliness and longing; trios, like "Abbondanza" sung by three glorious tenors sent to greet Rosabella in the absence of Tony who has been injured in a truck smashup. And then there's "Rosabella," "Sposalizio," . . . etc. But even the word "opera" is perhaps not inclusive enough. There are also strictly "pop" tunes which have already become famous on the hit parade—"Standin' on the Corner," "Joey, Joey, Joey," "Big 'D'."

The form is irregular and varied, reflecting the emotions of its characters on every level. The form that came naturally to the character was the one selected in each case. Where the florid emotionality of the aria is used as it is for Tony (Robert Weede), it is used because opera is part of his tradition. His roots are European, classical. When the comic-lovers Shorty Long and Susan Johnson, sing in a popular-ballad style, again it is because it is natural for them to do so.
