MONSTER-MONSTER

BOB HOPE

BOB HOPE

This page is dedicated to Dr. Jerk-II and Mr. Hyde humor. Since the man behind the story is a psychiatrist, we'll give you some funnies about head-shrinkers. Know what a psychiatrist is? He's the fellow who tells you what everybody knows in language nobody can understand! Or, when a beautiful girl enters a room, he watches everybody else!

Out here in Hollywood, psychiatrists are cheaper by the dozen, and one of Jack Benny's favorite stories runs like this. "Doctor, come at once!" Mr. Smith telephoned urgently. "You know, you told my wife to sleep with her mouth open because she was afraid she'd smother to death? So a mouse just ran down her throat."

"Now control yourself," said the doctor, calmly. "I'll be over as soon as I can. In the meantime, you keep waving a hunk of cheese in front of her mouth, and maybe the mouse will come out."

Fifteen minutes later, the doc reached the Smith house. He was surprised to see Mr. Smith waving a huge fish in front of his prostrate wife's face. "What's the idea?" asked the astonished doctor. "I told you to wave a piece of cheese to lure the mouse out, not a fish."

"I know, I know," said Mr. Smith. "But first we've got to get the cat out!"

An anxious businessman visited a head-shrinker of my acquaintance and described his trouble. "Every once in awhile," he explained, "I eat a lot of grapes."

"So why worry?" said the analyst, nonplussed. "Most people eat grapes."

The patient looked at him shocked, and gasped, "Off the wallpaper?"

Out here in sunny California, everybody's ambitious, even gypsies. The other day, I passed a store that had been rented by a band of them. A sign in the window read: "Fortunes Told: $1.00; Psychoanalysis 75c extra."

How do you know if you're a psycho? You don't have to go through a mental examination. Just give yourself this simple test. If you think you're crazy, you're not. But if you think everybody else is, you are!

But I'll always cherish the anecdote about the man who took his wife to a skull specialist, with this complaint: "We've been married 25 years and lately, she's begun to act queer."

"How's that?" asked the analyst.

"She keeps goats in the living room. They smell awful."

"Why don't you open the doors and windows?"

"What?" the man exploded. "And let all my pigeons fly away?"

Did you know that Groucho Marx refused to sign a new movie contract because, he argued, it didn't have a Sanity Claus in it?

The scene is a mental institution. The first patient says: "It's a lucky thing my name is Jerry."

"Why?" asks the second patient.

"Because everybody here insists on calling me Jerry!"

During a pause in the rehearsals of my TV show, one of the actors told about the three inmates who were behaving in a screwball way. One kept snatching the air overhead. The second made dipping gestures with his hands, and the third kept waving his arms like the blades of a windmill.

"What are you doing?" asked a visitor.

"I'm picking stars," said the first one.

"And I'm picking up those he dropped," replied the second.

"And what about you?" he asked the third man.

"Oh, me?" he said with a laugh. "A feller has to do something around here to keep from going nuts!"

Der Bingle (Ol' Man Crosby to this new generation) used to tell about the movie star who thought he was the most. He even read—and believed—his own fan mail. One letter in particular he liked. "I think you're the greatest actor who ever appeared on the screen. You are the most exciting, most handsome, most athletic man in the whole, wide world." His chest swelled with pride as he continued to wade through a dozen pages of flattering drivel until he came to the last paragraph. "Please excuse my writing in crayon. The place where I'm in doesn't let me use anything sharp."
