Hi Fans!

Like the big story in this issue explains, the kids at Benedict Arnold High decided to earn their keep this summer. A lot of things happened, as you can imagine, but in this brief space, I can give you some of the ha-ha highlights. Badger got a job at the drug store. The first day, a customer asked for a bottle of hair tonic. "Can you prove that it's good?" he asked.

"Sure I can," Badger snapped back. "Only this morning a lady customer took the cork out of the bottle with her teeth, and half an hour later, she had a mustache!"

But to be fair, it wasn't Badger's fault the drug store closed down a week later. The answer was evident in the sign the owner placed in the window: "We're out of business. The following services, which were available here, can be found elsewhere: Change of a dollar at bank. Drink of water at fountain in park. Stamps at post office. Directions from cop at corner. Matches at candy store. Magazines for browsing at doctors' or dentists' offices. Bus information at terminal. And loafing at any other location of your own choice."

Doltish's interview didn't last very long. "We want a responsible young man," he was told.

"That's for me," said Doltish, enthusiastically. "Everywhere I worked last year, when something went wrong, they told me I was responsible!"

"Why did you leave your last position?" the man asked.

"Illness. The boss got sick of me!"

"We address and ship merchandise out of town. Can you spell Mississippi?"

Doltish eyed him brightly. "The river or the state?"

Anyway, they must have been desperate because Doltish got the job. After a few days, the boss complained, "Why don't you ever get to work on time any more?"

"Come on now," Doltish replied. "You insisted I don't watch the clock here at the office, so I lost the habit of watching it at home!"

But Doltish did a bang-up job. Really! He broke cups and saucers while packing them. When he dropped a whole, valuable set, the boss told him half his salary would be deducted every week until it was all paid for.

"How much was it worth?" asked Doltish.

"Two hundred and fifty dollars!"

"Yipee!" yelled the boy bonehead. "I've got a steady job at last!"

But Doltish soon got another job, selling lightning rods. That didn't last long, though. He got caught in a storm with a bunch of samples in his arms!

Tad got a clerical job in a business office, whose owner had signs ordering "THINK" hung all over the place. Nobody ever found out who the guilty person was who lettered "OR THWIM" on the bottom of all of them one night after everybody went home.

Anyway, Badger went to work for his old man, Mr. Goldliver, who ran his office like Capt. Bligh. One day, the old brute spotted a young fellow seated idly with his feet up on the desk, whistling. "You there!" Goldliver snorted angrily. "How much do you make a week?"

"Forty-two dollars," the kid said.

Goldliver withdrew the sum from his wallet, and slapped the bills into the boy's hand. "Now scram! Vamoose! You're fired!"

As the boy streaked out of the office, Goldliver turned to Badger. "How long was that good-for-nothing on my payroll?" he asked.

"He didn't work for us, Pops," said Badger. "He was just waiting to take our orders for malteds and cokes for the drug store."

Goldliver was always in a rage at the office. But everyone enjoyed one peaceful and quiet day. One afternoon, while having lunch at his desk with one of his vice-presidents, he got so excited while talking, he picked up a bottle of glue instead of maple syrup and poured it on his French toast.

But that day started wrong for Goldliver. His wife was doing some alterations on one of her dresses, and he kissed her goodbye before she had a chance to take the pins out of her mouth!

That's the way the kook crumbled. And speaking of that, if you want to have a hilarious old time with that King of Kooks, you couldn't do better than buy JERRY LEWIS Comics—America's funniest comic mag—next month!
