The Robin Hood of the West

THE CISCO KID

HOSPITALITY ON THE FRONTIER

Hospitality, amigos, was the frontier's finest tradition. The homesteader's sod shanty, the hunter's log cabin, the patron's hacienda—all had their latch-strings open for the stranger. The food was good and usually plentiful; the menu depended on the locality. On the plains, beef steak was usually supplemented with game and wild fowl. In the mountains, the table might be spread with venison or a haunch of mountain sheep. Isolated stock tenders, however, would not be able to offer more than a meal of fried salt pork and beans. But that they would share willingly.

On a round-up, a ranch that sent out a chuck wagon fed all riders free, just as their riders were fed by other chuck wagons. A stray man or drifter who went visiting and eating from ranch to ranch was called a 'Grub-line rider.' But even the laziest saddle tramp was obliged to repay hospitality by helping the cook to clean up the dishes or fill up the kitchen wood box. Ranch cook shacks often displayed crudely-lettered signs reading:—IF YOU CAN'T WASH DISHES DON'T EAT!

DESERVES NO MERCY!

DOC DESERVES
A TRIAL!

SI! BUT NO USE ARGUING
WITH A LYNCH MOB! YOU
START A FIGHT, PANTCHO, TO DISTRACT THEM!

A LITTLE LATER...

AND IN A SHORT TIME

AFTERWARD, THE COMPANIONS HIT THE TRAIL...

THE CHASE

Bob Moore glanced back anxiously now and then, across the desert flats. Would he make the border ahead of Sheriff Stone? Bob spurred his tired horse faster at the grim thought.

Bitterness churned in the young cowpoke's mind. He was innocent of the Cactus Mine silver robbery. Yet he had been jailed for it without a chance to protest that he had no "partner" who had skipped with the loot to parts unknown. The sheriff had promised him a fair trial.

"Fair trial . . . bah!" muttered Bob aloud. "Sheriff Stone would remind the court how I once robbed a drunken rancher of pocket money, and served 30 days for that. Once a criminal, always a criminal, they'd think. I wouldn't have a chance. Any sheriff like Stone is only out to convict someone—anyone—innocent or guilty."

The theft of the rancher had been Bob's one and only minor crime, the impulsive act of a young fool on a dare. After jail, Bob had promised himself to be strictly an honest man. What was a little mistake like that?

But now Bob saw how prejudiced lawmen were, the polecats! The moment the silver job was done, with no one else handy to accuse, Sheriff Stone had grabbed an "ex-criminal" as the logical suspect.

Bob squinted backward a moment, while reviewing the previous events leading to this desert flight.

For three days he had languished behind bars, seething at the injustice. Then he had noticed the loose bars at the window. At night, he had worked them loose and escaped. Finding his horse at the sheriff's stable, Bob had ridden out of town—a free man.

But he wouldn't remain free long. Not unless he got across the border, to join the notorious Border Gang. Then he'd become a real bandit for life. That's what Sheriff Stone expected, wasn't it? Why disappoint him?

Bob laughed harshly at the grim joke.

Looking back again, he stiffened in the saddle. That tiny horseman in a cloud of dust . . . the sheriff! Bob grinned, urging his sweaty horse into a last gallop. He would make the border ahead of the lawman, and vanish in the Sonora Mesa, where he would recruit with the Border Gang for life . . .

Bob winced. That would be ruining his life, voluntarily. Wouldn't it be more sensible to go back and stand trial, hoping to be cleared? Maybe they would nab the real robber.

Torn by his conflicting thoughts, Bob reached the Sonora River, marking the border. Beyond lay the beckoning Mesa—and freedom from the law. Should he cross the stream? . . .

Bob dismounted slowly. He let his horse drink. He turned and waited.

Waited for the sheriff.

"Put on the bracelets, Sheriff Stone," grated Bob, holding out his wrists to the weary, dust-caked man who dismounted. "I'm a fool but I'll stand trial for the silver job."

"Put down your hands," croaked the sheriff. A smile spread across his sun-cracked lips. "You're not standing trial. Jud Mason is. Caught him last night, loot and all."

Bob Moore was stunned with joy, but also bewildered. "But if I'm cleared, why did you chase me all day like a hunted man?"

"Reckon I owed it to you," said the lawman laconically. "We can make a mistake at times, like anyone else, jailing the wrong hombre at first. After I tracked down Jud Mason, I found you'd escaped jail. I feared you might have some fool notion of joining the Border Gang. I didn't want you to ruin your life, son."

"Sheriff," stammered Bob, "I had some mighty unkind thoughts about you, but now I see I was wrong, too. A lawman doesn't just grab the guilty. He also protects the innocent."

Bob shuddered, looking back at the Mesa. How close he had been to losing his freedom, for life.

THE CISCO KID

THE ALARM

AFTER A HARD DAY ON THE TRAIL,
THE CISCO KID AND PANCHO
RELAX IN A HOTEL ROOM.

THIS IS ONE OF MY FAVORITE BOOKS, PANCHO!
THE DICTIONARY!

ANY GOOD STORIES
IN IT?

IT IS NOT A STORY BOOK, PANCHO!
IT TELLS THE MEANING OF WORDS!
THIS IS HOW I LEARN TO SPEAK
MUCHO ENGLISH!

PANCHO'S FAVORITE BOOKS IS COOK BOOKS... WHERE ARE YOU GOING, AMIGO?

I'M TAKING THESE BACK TO DOC!
MAYBE I'LL BORROW SOME MORE! HE'S THE ONLY SEÑOR
INTOWN WITH ANY KIND OF LIBRARY!

OUTSIDE, LURKING IN THE SHADOWS...

DO YOU KNOW
WHAT THIS PROFESSOR LOOKS LIKE?

NO, BUT THE BOSS SAID
HE'S ALWAYS CARRY-ING BOOKS!

PROF. WELLS
GOES ALONG TO DOC'S OFFICE
WHERE CISCO RETURNS HIS BORROWED BOOKS.
THEY TELL DOC ABOUT THE SNEAK ATTACK!

YOU MUST HAVE ENEMIES,
PROFESSOR!

OBVIOUSLY! BUT WHO?
I JUST ARRIVED FROM THE EAST! I DON'T KNOW ANY-BODY OUT HERE! I OWN
NOTHING WORTH STEALING!

BOILS DOWN TO THIS, THEN:
SOMEBODY HEARD YOU AIM
TO OPEN UP THE OLD SCHOOL-HOUSE AND THEY DON'T WANT IT OPENED!

SANTOS! WHO COULD BE AGAINST EDUCATION
FOR CHILDREN!

DON'T RIGHTLY KNOW!
RECKON THERE'S SOME FOLKS THAT JUST FAVOR
IGNORANCE!

MEANWHILE
WELL, BOSS, WE TOLD THE PROFESSOR TO GET OUT OF TOWN!

GOOD! AND DID YOU
ROUGH HIM UP TO SHOW WE MEAN BUSINESS?

GREAT JUMPING JUPITER!
YOU BEEN IN A STAMPEDE?

NO! WE WERE JUST ROUGHING UP THE
PROFESSOR!

I DON'T LIKE IT! IF THAT BOOK-TEACHER IS SUCH A
DOGGONE WILDCAT, HE WON'T
SCARE EASY! WE'LL HAVE TO USE STRONGER MEDICINE!

MORNING...

YOU MEAN TO SAY THAT SKINNY VARMINT DID A JOB ON YOU TWO WITH HIS BARE FISTS?

WELL, IT WAS TOO DARK TO SEE HIM! BUT HE DID SEEM BIGGER AND STRONGER!

LET'S NOT TAKE CHANCES! I'LL TAKE CARE OF HIM NOW!

NO, STAND BACK! WE DON'T WANT TO RISK HANGING --- IF WE DON'T HAVE TO!

MEANWHILE...

LET'S RIDE OUT TO THE SCHOOL-HOUSE, PANCHO, AND SEE HOW PROFESSOR WELLS IS GETTING ALONG!

HOKAY, CISCO!

CISCO! I'M MIGHTY GLAD TO SEE YOU! LOOK AT THIS!

A LITTLE LATER...

THESE HOMBRES WILL NOT BOTHER YOU ANY MORE, PROFESSOR! THEY'LL BE IN THE CALABOZO!

JUST THE PLACE FOR THEM! THEY'RE TOO AVARICIOUS FOR THEIR OWN GOOD!

"AV-A-RICIOUS?" WHAT MEANS THAT WORD?

THERE'S A 'DICTIONARY'! LOOK IT UP!

SANTOS! THIS DICTIONARY IS FULL OF MONEY!

WELL, I'LL BE DOGGED! SO BLACKLEG HID THE LOOT IN A BOOK!

SI! YOU'LL FIND IT PAYS TO LOOK INTO A BOOK ONCE IN AWHILE, HOMBRE! AND YOU'LL HAVE PLENTY OF TIME FOR IT!

SEVERAL DAYS LATER...

THE SCHOOL, HE IS OPEN AT LAST!

SI! AND THOSE LITTLE ONES WILL GROW UP TO BE DOCTORS, LAWYERS, GOVERNORS--- MAYBE EVEN A PRESIDENT! IF THEY STUDY THEIR BOOKS!

PANCHO WILL STUDY BOOKS FROM NOW ON, TOO! YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT TREASURE MAY BE INSIDE!

PANCHO, YOU'RE SO RIGHT!

BROWNSVILLE

When General Zachary Taylor built Fort Brown near the mouth of the Rio Grande, the border already had a long history of skirmishes. The town of Brownsville which sprang up around the Fort was born into a tradition of vendettas, gun-feuds and border wars. In 1849, came the climax to all the border trouble, the "Cortinas Rebellion," when Juan Cortinas, a professional horse-thief and bandido, proclaimed himself the "liberator" of Texas. He invaded Brownsville and captured the fort. By the time he was driven across the border, the entire Rio country was laid waste and stripped of cattle.

During the Civil War, Brownsville was occupied at different times by Confederate and Union troops. The war's end found Brownsville a gathering point for gunmen and soldiers of fortune who slipped across the river to join the forces of Maximilian, still clinging to his dying Mexican empire. Meanwhile, the war had left Texas bankrupt. There was no money to pay lawmen. The border country ran wild. Mexican and American outlaws raided the borderland with impunity. Juan Cortinas, now a Mexican Brigadier-General, stocked half a dozen ranches with stolen cattle and was even exporting them to Cuba. In retaliation, ranchers formed troops of "Regulators" and "Vigilantes" who organized harsh counter-raids south of the Rio.

But, in 1875, the famous Captain McNelly appeared on the scene with his company of Rangers. Courageously, they began to enforce the law. In June of that year, they trapped a gang of cattle thieves outside of Brownsville. Gradually, the balance was turned against the rustlers and they realized that their reign of terror was over.

mexican clothing

The Mexican man of today wears modern shirt and trousers. On his feet, he wears sandals made of thongs woven in such a way that this type of footwear is particularly comfortable and practical for working. His sombrero, or hat, though, is peculiarly his own, as is the gaily-colored serape which he wears somewhat casually thrown over his shoulders. The serape, however, is no mere adornment. During the heat of the day, it keeps the sun off his back. In the cool Mexican mornings and evenings, it is a warm and welcome cloak for his shoulders.
