YOU KNOW, OOGIE, SOMETIMES
I THINK WE SEE TOO MUCH OF EACH OTHER!

Bobby and Jane tell you why they chose ROADMASTER for their Summer Vacation

● "When Dad said we kids could get new bicycles for summer vacation, we rushed downtown and looked at every bicycle we could find. We even tried them out, and what do you think? We both chose Roadmaster Luxury Liners. They're really super! Roadmasters have so many things just like Dad's new automobile—chromium, Gothic fenders . . . stop-light operated from the brake . . . a real searchbeam headlamp . . . broad base rims that hold more air . . . two-tone colors and shiny sparkling embossed chrome trim. Yes, and the man who sold them to us said they were 100% safer because the frames are electronically welded. We think they're the best-looking bicycles on the road, and the safest. If you're going to get a new bike for summer vacation, be sure you get a Roadmaster just like ours. Mail the coupon and the Roadmaster people will send you a colored folder telling all about Roadmasters, 'America's Finer Bicycles'."

GOOD, BETTER, BEST

"HEY! WAIT FOR ME!" yelled

Oogie, as he ran out of his house, cut across the lawn, and took a running leap over the front hedge. Just ahead on the sidewalk, Judy and Randolph turned around in time to see him catch his foot on the top of the hedge and go sprawling over the curb into the street.

"My, my!" exclaimed Randolph. "The things people throw away these days!"

"Don't be funny, Randolph!" said Judy. "Nobody threw him away! He did it himself on purpose!"

"In that case," said Randolph, "he must be awfully mad at himself!"

Judy ignored her brother's comment and turned her attention once more to Oogie, who was now on his feet, dusting himself off. "Really, Oogie," she said, "it isn't necessary to show off in front of me! After all, I've known you since you were a mere child!"

"But, Judy—" began Oogie, defensively.

"No excuses!" interrupted Judy. "It's time I had a talk with you, Oogie, because, frankly, I'm worried about you! You have no sense of direction in life! You just go stumbling around, getting nowhere in particular! What have you got to say for yourself?"

"Well—" began Oogie.

"And furthermore," interrupted Judy, "sometimes I fear you won't become the great man I absolutely insist that you be! You're not at all like the great men in history I've read about. They were all serious and studious—like I. Q. Smart!"

"Oh—him!" said Oogie, derisively. "You're just fascinated by him—that's all!"

"Certainly!" agreed Judy. "And why, I ask you—why?"

"That's what I'd like to know," said Oogie. "Why?"

"I'm glad you asked me that, Oogie," said Judy. "It's his mind—that's what it is! He's the smartest boy in our class! Why, do you know that every day for the past ten days he has said Good Day to me in a different language!"

"Aw gee, Judy," said Oogie, "I can say Good Day in lots of different ways, too. Let's see—Bonjour . . . uh . . . God Dag . . . Oodgay Orningmay . . ."

"That's three down and seven to go!" said Randolph, encouragingly. "You're not bad, Oogie!"

"Hear that, Judy?" asked Oogie, hopefully. "Randy says I'm not bad! And if I'm not bad, I must be good, hah, Judy?"

"You may be good, Oogie," replied Judy, "but good isn't good enough!"

"So then I'll make myself better!" said Oogie.

"No," said Judy, "you have to be best! That is the only way to be great!"

"Judy," said Oogie, with sudden resolve in his voice, "you have convinced me! From now on there'll be nothing but self-improvement for me! I shall be satisfied with nothing but the best! The next time you see me I shall be a noble cog in the wheel of life—and all because of you!" With a grim and determined air, Oogie strode away.

"Oh, Randy!" sighed Judy, gazing proudly at Oogie's retreating figure. "Isn't it wonderful! There goes a great man in the making!"

Down the street, Oogie rounded the corner and bumped into Betty the Brain. "Betty!" he yelled. "You're just the one I want to see!"

"Oogie!" Betty yelled. "You're just the one I want to see!"

"Here's the Candy Bar," said Oogie. "Let's go in and talk over sodas!"

Inside, Betty said, "I've got a problem—and it's I. Q. Smart! I admire him, but he admires Judy, so I want you to tell me how I can be more like Judy, so that I. Q. will admire me!"

"Well," said Oogie, "I've got a problem, too—and it's Judy! I admire her, but she admires I. Q. Smart, so I want you to tell me how I can be more like him, so that Judy will admire me!"

"It's a deal!" said Betty. "Now tell me how to be like Judy!"

"Well, first of all," began Oogie, his face lighting up, "Judy is—well—Judy . . . gee! Judy's just swell! She's . . ."

At that moment Judy and Randolph walked past the Candy Bar.

"This isn't going to sound very good to you, Judy," said Randolph, catching a glimpse of Oogie and Betty the Brain inside, "but I think I'd better tell you, because it's for the best that you know—"

"Know what?" asked Judy.

"—that Oogie is having a soda with another girl!"

Judy looked through the window of the Candy Bar. "Ooooh!" she wailed. "It's Oogie—with Betty the Brain!"

"Uh-huh," said Randolph. "The smartest girl in your class! Oogie said he wanted nothing but the best from now on, and I guess he really meant it!"

"Look at him, Randy," cried Judy. "He looks so happy—as—as if he simply loves talking to her!"

"Buenas Dias!" said a voice behind them. Judy and Randolph turned to find I. Q. Smart approaching them. "That's Spanish for 'Good Day'!" he explained.

"But it's not a good day," moaned Judy. "It's a terrible day! It's the worst day in my life! Look!" And she pointed through the window at Oogie and Betty the Brain.

"Oh, no!" exclaimed I. Q.

"Oh, yes!" countered Judy. "And it's all my fault, because I told Oogie I wanted him to be more serious—like you! And now he's gone for your type of girl!"

"No," said I. Q., "it's all my fault, because I told Betty I wanted her to be more frivolous—like you! And now she's gone for your type of boy!"

A look of consternation swept over Judy's face. "Oh!" she cried. "I just thought of something! Oogie has insulted me with the most insulting insult I could ever hope to be insulted by, because if he thinks SHE'S better than I am—"

Judy steamed into the Candy Bar with I. Q. Smart and Randolph at her heels. "OOGIE PRINGLE—" she began, angrily.

"Judy!" exclaimed Oogie, whirling around to face her. "Oh, boy! Am I glad to see you!"

"G-glad—?" stammered Judy.

"I thought I could tell Betty how to be like you, Judy," said Oogie, "but the more I tried, the more I realized that nobody could ever be like you!"

"And I thought I could tell Oogie how to be like I. Q.," sighed Betty, "but now I know that's impossible, too!"

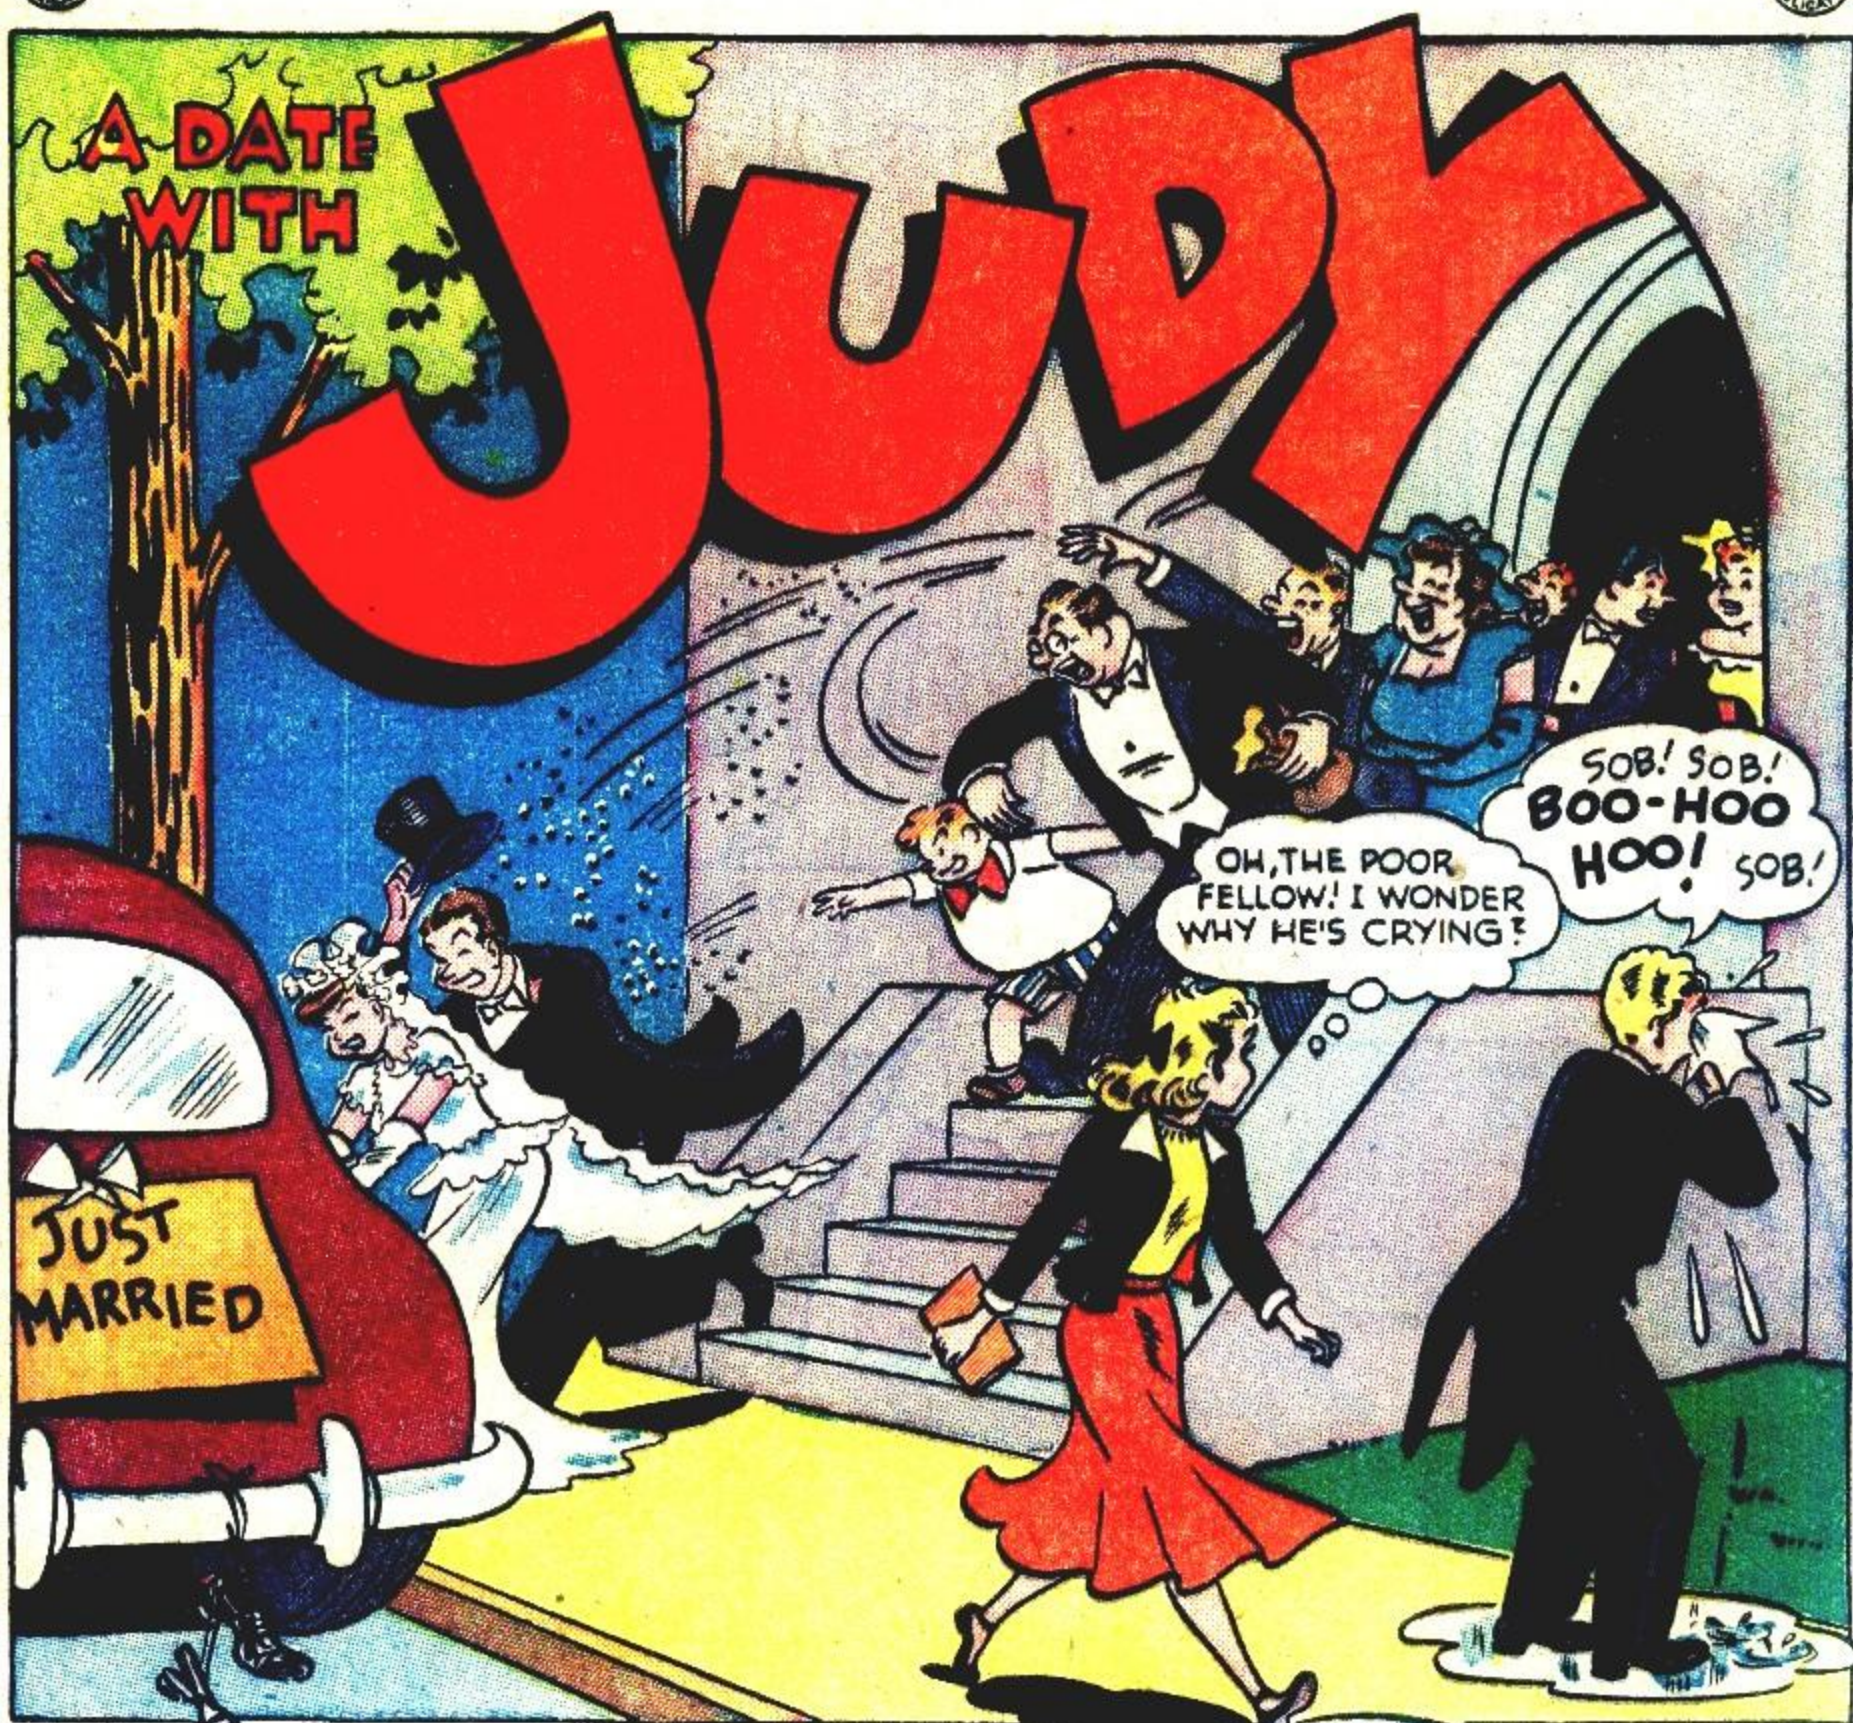

"Oh, Oogie!" said Judy. "I can't imagine why I ever told you to improve yourself—you're perfect just as you are!"

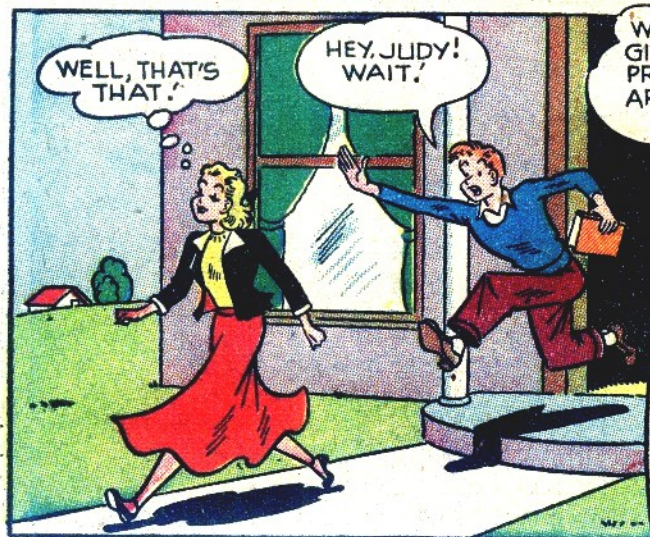

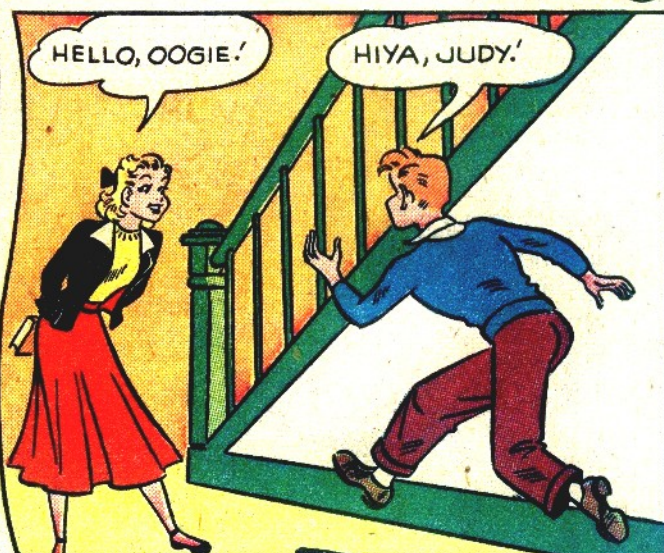

"You're so right, Judy!" agreed Oogie. "When I'm with you, there isn't any room for improvement!"

"Well," said Randolph, philosophically, "it's been a good day after all!"

"Better than that—" said I. Q. Smart.

"—it's been the best day possible!" finished Judy.
