PIRATE PRINGLE

"Oogie!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Look at me!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Straight at me, Oogie! Straight, STRAIGHT at me!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Now, as I was saying—"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"OOGIE!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"You're not listening to me!"

"Yes, Judy—er—no, Judy—er—yes, I am, Judy—indeed I am, indeed, indeed!"

"Look alive! Look alert! Look—"

"Look, Judy—"

"Oogie!"

"Er—yes, Judy—just as you say, Judy—"

"Now, as I was saying, Oogie—OOGIE! Straighten your tie! Get the hair out of your eyes! Pick up your feet!"

"Yes, Judy . . . Yes, Judy . . . YES, JUDY . . ."

Oogie shouted the last words so loud that he woke himself up. He sat up in bed and looked about, momentarily bewildered. Then he remembered. He shuddered. "Wow!" he breathed. "What a dream!"

He sat still for a few minutes, trying to collect the shattered pieces of his being.

"I don't understand it!" he muttered, climbing morosely out of bed. "Even in my dreams she's got to boss me! Oogie, do this—Oogie, do that! NAG! NAG! NAG! You'd think she'd have more consideration for a guy when he's trying to get some sleep! I don't know why I stand for it!"

Oogie snapped to sudden attention. "Stand for it—? Stand for it—? I WON'T stand for it—that's what! She can't do this to me! I'll show her! I'm going to REVOLT—that's what! REBEL! MUTINY! An end to this slavery, say I! Down with tyranny! Down with Captain Judy Bligh! Throw her to the sharks!"

Oogie dressed hurriedly, vengeance in every move.

"HAH!" he glowered as he stormed out of the house and headed toward Judy's. "She thinks she floats upon a calm sea—boss of all she sees, including me! Little does she know the troubled waters coming her way! The monster stirs in the deeps! Arise, peasant! Cast off your chains! The hour is at hand! Let her eat cake! Evil deeds and chickens come home to roost! Ha-HAH! Liberté! Egalité! Fraternité! VIVE OOGIE!"

With a few last powerful strides Oogie covered the walk to Judy's house and pounded on the door. He crossed his steely arms upon his chest and waited. At last the door opened—slowly, oh so slowly, thought Oogie, and Judy peered out—fearfully, oh so fearfully. Her eyes fell upon the grim and glowering form of Oogie standing on the threshold.

"Oh," she said. "It's you, Oogie. Hi."

"DONT 'HI' ME, WOMAN!" snarled Oogie. "This is the end of such condescending familiarity! From this day forward I am a FREE MAN! No more shall you nag and scold and boss me—in dreams or out of them! I hereby MUTINY—SEE?! Your reign is over, tyrant!"

Judy looked at Oogie a moment and then shrugged. "Well, all right, Oogie," she said, "if that's the way you want it, go ahead and mutiny! It's a free country!"

"Er—Judy," said Oogie with elaborate explicitness, "I don't believe you understood me! I'm going to mutiny—M-U-T-I-N-Y—mutiny!"

"I heard you the first time, Oogie!" replied Judy, coolly. "And I said go ahead! You have my permission!"

"Now wait a minute!" objected Oogie in an annoyed tone. "That's not fair! You're not doing this right! You're supposed to get down on your knees and beg for mercy! You're supposed to tremble and whine and promise never to do anything wicked again and—"

"Oogie, please!" interrupted Judy. "Don't let's dramatize! Just mutiny and be done with it! We shall brave the seas of life separately, since you do not choose that we do so together! I wish you well and hold nothing against you, Pirate Pringle! Farewell—and happy sailing!" She closed the door in his face.

Oogie stared at the blank expanse of closed door before him. "I—I feel as if I've just walked the plank!" he gulped to himself. He walked slowly down the path toward the main sidewalk. "Ohhh, boy!" he muttered. "Leave it to Judy to mess things up! She sure fixed my mutiny!" He stopped at the end of the path and leaned one arm against a tree. There was an air of finality about him. "Well," he thought, "I'm a free man! No more nagging! No more bossing! No more Judy!" He gulped and blinked several times. "No more Judy!... That's awful! Hmm . . . I wonder . . ."

Oogie turned about and retraced his footsteps up the path to Judy's door. He pressed the doorbell a little hesitantly, and a moment later Judy peered out with a cool "Yes?"

"Er—Judy—that is—Captain, Sir," said Oogie, "I—I've been thinking things over and I've decided to give you another chance!"

"WH-A-AT?" exploded Judy. "You have decided to give me—"

"That's right!" interrupted Oogie nervously. "It's a big and generous thing for me to do, I know, but you were such a good sport about my mutiny and I think you deserve another chance!"

"Hm!" said Judy. "Ordinarily I wouldn't let you get by with this, Oogie, but it just so happens that I need you to help me with something, so I guess I will let you un-mutiny! Come in, Oogie!"

"Oh, boy, Judy—er—Captain, Sir—that's swell! Thanks—thanks a lot!"

"Now, Oogie, pay strict attention to what I tell you!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Look at me!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Straight at me, Oogie! Straight, STRAIGHT at me!"

"Yes, Judy . . ."

"Now, as I was saying—"

"Yes, Judy . . . Yes, Judy . . . Yes, Judy . . ."
