WHAT TO DO IF POLIO COMES YOUR WAY

Keep children with their own friends. Keep them away from people they have not been with right along, especially in close, daily living. Many people have polio infection without showing signs of sickness. Without knowing it, they can pass the infection on to others.

Try not to get over-tired by work, hard play or travel. If you already have the polio infection in your body, being very tired may bring on serious polio.

Keep from getting chilled. Don't bathe or swim too long in cold water. Take off wet clothes at once. Chilling can lessen your body's protection against polio.

Keep clean. Wash hands carefully before eating and always after using the toilet. Hands may carry polio infection into the body through the mouth. Also keep food clean and covered.

WATCH FOR EARLY SIGNS OF SICKNESS

Polio starts in different ways—with headache, sore throat, upset stomach or fever. Persons coming down with polio may also feel nervous, cross or dizzy. They may have trouble in swallowing or breathing. Often there is a stiff neck and back.

ACT QUICKLY—CALL YOUR DOCTOR AT ONCE

Until he comes, keep the patient quiet and in bed, away from others.

"LET'S have a picnic!" said Judy, looking with sprightly animation from Oogie to Tootsie to Elmo as they sprawled lethargically in the Foster living room. "We can go out to High Bluff Park!"

"Too hot!" said Oogie.

"Too far!" said Tootsie.

"Too much trouble!" said Elmo.

"Besides," said Oogie, "what's in a picnic?"

"Besides ants," said Tootsie.

"And sand," said Elmo.

"And sunburn," said Oogie.

Judy looked at them in exasperation. "My goodness!" she said. "I've never seen such a lazy bunch of do-nothings in all my life! What you need is a good lesson in how to live and love it—and I'm going to see that you get it! I'm going to teach you how to perk up with a picnic! Now, you just leave everything to me—all you have to do is come! I'll even call your mothers to let them know you're going!"

Judy dashed into the front hall and made several hurried calls and then returned to the living room. "Nobody's mother was home," she announced. "I should have remembered—they're all at the Women's Club meeting with my mother. But when I called the Women's Club, the line was out of order, so I'll have to run by there on my way to your father's office, Oogie, to ask if we can borrow his car!"

"But what about your father's car?" asked Oogie.

"Oh, I called my father," said Judy, "but he has to have the car this afternoon to take an important customer out! And I don't want to ask your father over the phone, Oogie, because that would make it too easy for him to turn me down! I know that when I eye him face to face and explain it's for the Noble Purpose of a Picnic, he'll come through! Now, you three just sit right there—I'll be back in a whiz—" The front door slammed on her words and she raced off down the street.

Forty-five minutes later she was back, flushed with haste and the heat of the day, her arms loaded with groceries. She stumbled through the living room toward the kitchen. "Well, I told all our mothers," she announced, gasping for breath, "and it's okay! So now I'm going to go ahead and make some lunch—and oh, yes—your father couldn't let me have the car, Oogie, on account of it's in the garage for repairs—seems like the last time we borrowed it—well, anyway, I decided it would be just as nice if we went by bicycle—so on the way home I arranged with Mitzi to see about borrowing her cousins' bikes for Tootsie and Elmo—and Oogie can use Randolph's and I'll ride my own, so we're all set! And oh, yes—I naturally had to ask Mitzi to join us and she thought it would be nice if Gerald came along, too—and since Karl and Gracie were over at Mitzi's when I stopped by, I had to ask them! So now there're eight of us going!"

Judy stopped suddenly and rummaged in her bag of groceries. "Oh, golly!" she lamented. "I forgot the mustard. I'll have to call up the grocery store and have them deliver a jar right away!" She made a quick trip to the telephone, argued and pleaded and triumphed over Mr. Jones about the size of the order, then rushed into the kitchen and began making a stack of sandwiches. The telephone rang. She ran to answer.

"That was Mitzi," she explained on her way back to the kitchen. "Her cousins want to come along on the picnic, so I'm going to have to find some other bikes for Tootsie and Elmo to use! Gosh, that makes ten of us now! I'll have to order some more bread! Oh, dear! Here comes the delivery boy with the mustard. Well, he'll just have to go back for the bread! Mr. Jones isn't going to like this!"

Judy relieved the delivery boy of the mustard and hastily dispatched him for the bread. She ran downstairs to the cellar and searched frantically for pickles—any kind of pickles—and for jelly to put on some of the sandwiches. She plummeted upstairs again and crashed into the delivery boy just as he arrived with the loaf of bread and an ultimatum from Mr. Jones—NO MORE DELIVERIES!

"Huh!" she thought. "No picnic spirit—that's what's the matter with him!" She resumed her sandwich-making with lightning speed. Then she gasped. She blanched. She stared in shocked confusion at what she was doing—putting mustard and jelly together on the same sandwich. She discarded them and began again. Then a thought struck her. "Oh, dear!" she muttered. "We've got to have something to drink! I know! We'll buy some pop at the last stand on the way! She rushed to her purse and took note of her financial status.

"Randolph!" she cried, running upstairs to her brother's room. "How about being a good brother and lending me your allowance for the sake of my picnic?"

"Picnic?" said Randolph. He considered.

"Tell you what, Judy—I'll lend you my allowance at 25 per cent interest plus an invitation to the picnic for me and my girl!"

"It's robbery," said Judy, "but okay!" She charged back to the kitchen and began making more sandwiches for the two new mouths to feed. She surveyed the lunch. It looked skimpy for twelve people. She frowned anxiously and began stripping the cupboards of all the crackers, cookies and cold snacks she could find.

"Golly," she gasped, looking out the window at an approaching flock of bikes and riders, "here they all are—Tootsie and Gerald and Karl and Gracie and Mitzi's two cousins—and, oh dear! they've each got a friend with them, and oh dear—I forgot to tell Randolph we're going by bike and that Oogie's using his and golly! I forgot to see about those other bikes for Tootsie and Elmo! Oh well, we'll just have to double up! Now let's see—there are fourteen of us, but only ten bikes—so I'll divide the lunch up into ten little bundles, so we'll all have a fair share of the load—no, let's see—eight bundles, because someone will have to carry the pop—and oh dear! I just KNOW I've forgotten something—"

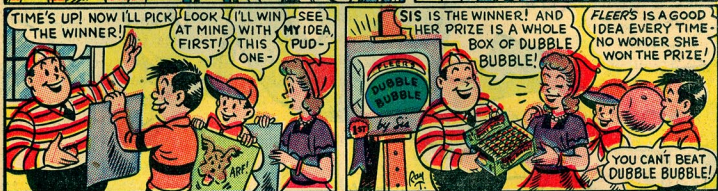

An hour later the picnic was in full swing at High Bluff Park. There were ants and sand and sunburn, but nobody seemed to mind. It was all a part of the outing and everyone was having a wonderful time—everyone except Judy. She lay in a state of complete exhaustion against the trunk of a tree.

"Boy, Judy," said Oogie, appreciatively munching a thick sandwich, "we're certainly enjoying this! You sure taught us do-nothings a swell lesson this afternoon!"

"Really, Oogie?" mumbled Judy, her voice small and weary. "Well, I taught myself an even better lesson this afternoon!"

"Honestly, Judy?" said Oogie. "What was that?"

"That going on a picnic is NO PICNIC!"
