OOGIE THE OGRE

JUDY had been in the Pop Bottle for more than an hour, pouring her heart out to Mitzi over a chocolate malted. "It's true, Mitzi," she said in a very-sorry-for-herself tone of voice, "it's every bit of it true!"

"It's hard to believe," said Mitzi, shaking her head. "I always thought Oogie was such a sweet boy!"

"Oh, he's sweet, all right—when he wants to be," said Judy. "But when he doesn't want to be—" Judy shuddered expressively—

"WATCH OUT! He has a temper that could shake the world from here to China! Like all those times I was telling you about! And you haven't heard the worst of it yet!"

"I haven't?" said Mitzi, again shaking her head.

"I should say not! I remember one time when Oogie got so mad over a simple little incident that he didn't speak to me for a week! You see, it was one afternoon last spring when we had decided to go for a walk in the park. Just before we started out, I remembered the sailboat pond over at the south end, and I thought how much fun it would be if we had a boat to sail, just the way the little children and old men have! So I suggested to Oogie that we take the model sailing ship his uncle left at Oogie's house and sail that for awhile. Well, Oogie didn't want to at first—"

"Selfish, just plain selfish!" sniffed Mitzi.

"That's what I said to him," nodded Judy. "He tried to say it was because he didn't want anything to happen to the boat, because his uncle had won a model ship contest with it. But what on earth could happen to it?! After all, we were only going to sail it around on some water, and that's where a boat belongs! So Oogie finally agreed, and we took the boat along with us to the park. Well, I can tell you we had a marvelous time! The breezes were just right and you should have seen that little ship go sailing from one side to the other, with Oogie chasing around and around the pond after it to keep it from hitting the cement sides! Oogie was getting pretty irate from all the chasing he had to do, but from where I sat it didn't look too bad. After all, exercise is good for anyone, particularly a growing boy."

"Naturally!" said Mitzi.

"Oogie didn't seem to see it that way," continued Judy. "And on top of it, he was upset because of the way all the boats kept ramming into each other in the middle of the pond. He was afraid some of the paint would be knocked off his uncle's model—"

"And was it?"

"Only a few scratches here and there, but as I told him, they could easily be touched up—”

“Nothing to it!”

“Well, Oogie was simply in one of those moods and he was determined to make the worst of everything. It was such a lovely afternoon and I was having such a grand time watching Oogie sail his uncle’s boat, that I just wished the afternoon would never end. So when Oogie saw Larry Reynolds and Butchie Burton and a bunch of the other boys from the football team coming, he wanted to clear out before they saw him sailing a toy boat—but naturally I refused!”

“Naturally!”

“Well, I can tell you, I’ve known people who can’t take a ribbing, but not until that afternoon did I ever know anyone who can’t take a ribbing the way Oogie can’t take a ribbing! Why, before those boys were through teasing him, Oogie was fit to be tied—particularly when they came over and sat down on the bench with me and chatted about this and that for a half hour or so. I was having a fine time, and I can’t see why Oogie was so mad. All we did was sit there and watch him chase that sailboat around the pond!”

“Some people just can’t stand to see other people enjoying themselves,” commented Mitzi. “Spoilsports, regular spoilsports!”

“You can say that again!” said Judy emphatically. “Particularly when you hear the rest of it! As I said, the afternoon was so lovely, that after Larry and the others left, I still couldn’t tear myself away. The wind died down a bit, so Oogie didn’t have to chase the boat around so much and he could finally come over and sit down beside me while it just drifted around in the middle of the pond. He was pretty surly, but I just ignored it. After all, I wasn’t going to let his bad temper spoil my afternoon. Well, it got to be five or six o’clock and just about everybody else had gone home and the only boat left on the pond was Oogie’s uncle’s. That’s when Oogie got really difficult! He just up and announced that the next time the boat drifted to the edge of the pond, he was going to pick it up and go home whether I went home with him or not!”

“Imagine that!” said Mitzi, scandalized.

“I told you it was hard to believe!” said Judy. “Well, I decided I would give in to him, because after all how can you fight a thing like that? The only trouble was that the boat never drifted to the edge of the pond again. It just stayed right out there in the middle and from where we stood, it looked as if it would stay there all night! There wasn’t a breath of wind stirring and it was hard telling when it would start up again. Well, we waited around for more than an hour, hoping that somehow that boat would drift to a spot where Oogie could reach it—but no such luck!”

“Goodness! What did you do?” asked Mitzi.

“We did the only thing we could do!” said Judy. “We took off Oogie’s shoes and stockings and he went in after the boat!”

“You mean he waded in after it?” said Mitzi.

“That was his original plan,” said Judy, “but as it turned out, he actually swam. He had to. I nearly collapsed from laughing when I saw the water go over his head! And you should have seen the expression on his face when he came up!”

“I can just see it!” said Mitzi, laughing.

“But Oogie didn’t think it was funny,” said Judy. “He was, in such a temper by the time he swam back with the boat, I thought he would never speak to me again!”

“No sense of humor,” said Mitzi.

“None whatsoever,” agreed Judy. “He practically snarled at me all the way home, but I just couldn’t help laughing at how funny he looked soaked to the skin and all! Oh, he was an ogre that time, I can tell you!”

“A regular ogre!” nodded Mitzi.

“Well, I must be going,” said Judy, getting up. “I have to meet Oogie at Hane’s Department Store. See you later, Mitzi—and thanks for your sympathetic ear!”

“What are friends for?” shrugged Mitzi with a smile.

Judy hurried to the appointed meeting place to find Oogie already there. “You are exactly one-half hour late,” he accused.

“There you go being an ogre again!” Judy pointed.

Oogie sighed. “Maybe you’re right, Judy—I should learn to control my temper no matter what!”

“Oh, for goodness sakes, don’t do that!” said Judy. “I wouldn’t have anything to talk to Mitzi about if you did!”
