A DATE WITH JUDY

OFF-DAY FOR JUDY

THEY had hardly gotten started for the tennis courts when Oogie noticed something was wrong. He made a simple statement and got no answer. He said, "Nice day, isn't it?" All Judy said was, "Hmph!"

He tried again. "Just look at that old sun shining up there for all it's worth! Glorious, huh?" All Judy said was, "Hmph!"

"Hey—what's eating you?" asked Oogie, taking a closer look at Judy's glowering face. "This an off-day for you or something?"

"Every day's an off-day for me, Oogie—when I know I'm going to run into Tootsie Hoffman—and I happen to know that Tootsie's going to be at the tennis courts this morning!"

"Aw, for pete's sake, Judy, you're not going to let Tootsie bother you, are you?!"

"LET Tootsie bother me! LET her!" Judy exclaimed vehemently. "Believe me, Oogie, when Tootsie's out to bother me, she doesn't stop to ask my permission!"

"You just don't have the right philosophy about it!" said Oogie. "You should rise above Tootsie Hoffman! You should be like that big, beautiful sun up there—always shining, always bright even though it may be covered over by a little cloud now and then! Why, nothing, but nothing, can keep that sun from shining!"

"Hmm . . . you mean I should look on Tootsie Hoffman as a sort of temporary nuisance—a little black cloud that will soon pass out of sight and blow away altogether, leaving me free to shine serenely on?"

"That's right!" said Oogie. "You should RISE ABOVE TOOTSIE HOFFMAN! Er—and now's your chance, Judy—because there's Tootsie at the courts now!"

Tootsie spotted Oogie at the same moment and rushed toward him, waving a camera instead of a tennis racquet. She didn't even seem to notice Judy. "Oh, Oogie," she cried, "you're just the one I've been looking for! I need a subject for my camera shots!"

"Well, I'M here and I'm VERY photogenic!" announced Judy icily.

"But I don't need a feminine subject, Judy dear," purred Tootsie. "I've taken all I need of my little sister Bonnie! Such a dear subject! No age lines to worry about with her! No, what I need is a masculine subject—someone with Oogie's splendid forehead—his noble, sensitive nose—his firm, full, beautifully modelled lips—" She snapped a picture as Oogie began to swell visibly under her praise. "Thank you, Oogie—that was superb! Now, do you suppose you could turn a little to the side, so that I can get the full line of your utterly divine jaw—so strong—so courageous—Ah! Thank you, Oogie—that was marvellous! Now, a little more to the side—I don't want to miss the charming way your hair dips down there—and the fine, aristocratic set of your ear—Ah! Beautiful, beautiful! Now—"

"Er—we'd better stop now—" interrupted Oogie uneasily. "It—it's—beginning to cloud over—!"

"Why, no, it isn't," said Tootsie, puzzled. "The sun is shining as bright as ever!"

"I was speaking of Judy's face," said Oogie. "I've got a feeling I'm in for some rough weather!" Sheepishly, he began following a cold and icy Judy toward the courts.

"Philosophy, indeed!" she hissed when they were out of Tootsie's hearing. "Don't let her bother me, hmph! Be like the sun, hah!"

"Well, you may not have been like the sun, Judy," said Oogie with a feeble laugh, "but you've got to admit—Tootsie sure got a rise out of you!"
