A major milestone—and a long-cherished ambition—in the notable career of Michel Legrand is marked on Columbia Records this month with the release of the Young French conductor-arranger's first American-made jazz "Lp," Legrand Jazz.

Recorded in New York City during Michel's visit to the United States last June, Legrand Jazz boasts a roster of stellar jazz musicians, performing a repertoire chosen from the works of eleven important jazz composers.

Album producer and annotator Nat Shapiro points out, Legrand, a multi-prize winning graduate of the Paris Conservatoire, "loves jazz with none of the tame enthusiasm, tinged with condescension of the academically oriented 'serious' composer. Michel loves jazz with an almost boyish enthusiasm, with, if not a first-hand knowledge of its growth and environment, the kind of passionate devotion and astonishing erudition that European fans are wont to have. His feelings for several important jazz figures borders on idolatry.

"In almost every sense," says Shapiro, "Legrand Jazz must be considered 'experimental.' Yet, with all of its daring, with all of its surprises and moments of flashing virtuosity, it stays within the bounds of jazz. The beat, the spontaneity, the indefinable spirit of jazz is there. This album is the first work of a truly important new voice in a wilderness where new voices are all too often disembodied.

"For the youthful maestro, each of his three New York recording sessions was an experience he described as 'formidable.' Writing and conducting an orchestra which one evening included his great hero, Miles Davis, left Michel virtually speechless—even in French.

"In previous collections such as the Columbia Album of Cole Porter and Legrand in Rio, he has not only made frequent and startlingly original use of the jazz musician as a soloist, but by virtue of his dynamic ensemble scoring and happy understanding of what a rhythm section is supposed to do, has often managed to make his large orchestra swing in the best tradition of Basie, Lunceford, Ellington and (big band) Gillespie.

"Each arrangement was created with two major factors taken into consideration: 1) the styles and techniques of the participating instrumentalists and 2) the structure and mood of the original compositions. Legrand's primary concern was to provide a sympathetic framework for specific soloists. Thus, Wild Man Blues, Jitterbug Waltz, 'Round Midnight and Django were written primarily as vehicles for Miles Davis, with full knowledge on Legrand's part, however, of the formidable capabilities of Herbie Mann, Bill Evans, Phil Woods and the other musicians given solo space. Similarly, Nuages and Blue and Sentimental were scored with the full, breathy tone of Ben Webster's tenor saxophone in mind. Rosetta, Stompin' at the Savoy and Night in Tunisia were designed to display both the collective and individual talents of two mighty brass foursomes and on each of these tracks, ample time was permitted for the soloists to romp through a traditional 'chase' pattern.

"The fact that each composition in this collection was written wholly or in part by a great jazzman was the result of a deliberate decision by Legrand not only to pay tribute to his peers, but to attempt to bring the work of these giants into new focus. Jelly Roll Morton's Wild Man Blues, heretofore associated only with Louis Armstrong and Morton himself, emerges, in its modern dress, and played by the outstanding trumpeter of this generation, with all the savagery, bitterness and beauty of Morton's best work. Jitterbug Waltz, one of Fats Waller's most engaging pieces, while retaining its basic charm, takes on other qualities characteristic of Waller the man and musician—notably wit and pulsation.

"Django Reinhardt's Nuages, John Lewis' Django and Bix Beiderbeck's In A Mist, all with their original Debussy-like coloration and mood, are given added dimension by Legrand's instinctive rapport with the material at hand, resulting in delicate, yet powerful underlining of the solos."
