A LETTER FROM JERRY

B-286

Hi Fans!

The flower show story in this issue reminds me of a visit I made a couple of weeks ago to a local nursery outside Hollywood. I told the gardener who ran the place what I wanted.

"Nothing grows in that spot I want to plant something. There are a lot of rocks around, the soil is almost all clay, it's in a dip that holds the rain, and all day it gets the hot sun," I said. "So what do you suggest?"

"Mister," he answered. "What about a nice flagpole?"

Since that story is about crime, too, I've got to tell you about what happened when Renfrew ordered a cuckoo clock from a mail-order company. When the post office men heard the package ticking, they thought it was a time bomb, so they threw it into a pail of water. But Renfrew didn't want to part with it. He put it up on the wall of his bedroom. It's the only clock in the world I know where every hour and every half hour the cuckoo comes out—and gargles!

The other story in the issue has to do with automobiles, so I can recall a few experiences with them. I went down to a showroom to look at the new models, and overheard a salesman and a customer.

"What am I anxious to get out of a new car?" asked the customer in reply to the salesman's question. "Only one thing—my 18-year-old son!"

They walked around inspecting the sleek new cars until the customer stopped and pointed to one shiny model. "That's the one! I don't have to look any further! I'm taking it," he said. "Let me write out a check for it right now."

"You've made a wise choice," said the salesman. "You want to drive it home or shall we have it delivered?"

"You just leave it right where it is," said the buyer. "Where will I ever find such a good parking space like this?!"

"Hey, Unc," asked Renfrew for no reason at all. "Why do cows wear bells?"

I shrugged.

"Maybe it's because their horns don't work!"

Cute, huh? You know why his parents named him Renfrew? They couldn't spell Blech!

Anyway, I bought a new car, and a few days later when I wanted to try it out, I told Renfrew to get in the back seat and to tell me if he saw a man in a uniform on a motorcycle following. "Make sure you don't forget," I reminded him. All went well for about ten minutes. I was hitting 70, then pushing 80 when the little ring-a-ding tapped me on the shoulder.

"Hey, Uncle Jer!" he cooed. "That feller you were expecting, he's caught up with us!"

The motorcycle cop marched up to me. Boy, he was angry! "Where d'ya think you're going, buddy?" he snarled. "I'm giving you a ticket for four reasons: speeding, going the wrong way on a one-way street, ignoring a stop sign, and failing to signal on a turn!"

"What're are you, bananas or something?" chirped up Renfrew. "You can't give my Uncle Jer a ticket—he ain't even got a license!"

"Follow me!" snapped the cop, after he got back his breath and his color. "I'm taking you to traffic court right now!"

I was so nervous, I guess I wasn't too careful. I banged into a taxi as I pulled away from the curb. "You stupid fool!" yelled the cabbie. "Can'tcha see where ya going? You blind?"

"Blind?" Renfrew crowed back. "We hit you, didn't we?"

While we were going down a steep hill, the brakes started to slip. "I can't stop too easy," I cried out. "What can I do?"

"Keep looking, Uncle Jer—and hit something cheap!" said Renfrew.

Anyway, when we reached traffic court, the judge really lit into me. He made a speech, going on and on until Renfrew got restless enough to interrupt him. "Boy, aren't you the eloquent one! I'll bet you can recite Lincoln's Gettysburg Address by heart, too!"

"I most certainly can, young man," he snapped back, "and I hereby fine your Uncle Jerry fourscore and seven dollars!"

I drove home very carefully, but I couldn't avoid a crackup. By the time I parked in front of my house, the car looked like it was a foreign make—the steering wheel was on the right side!

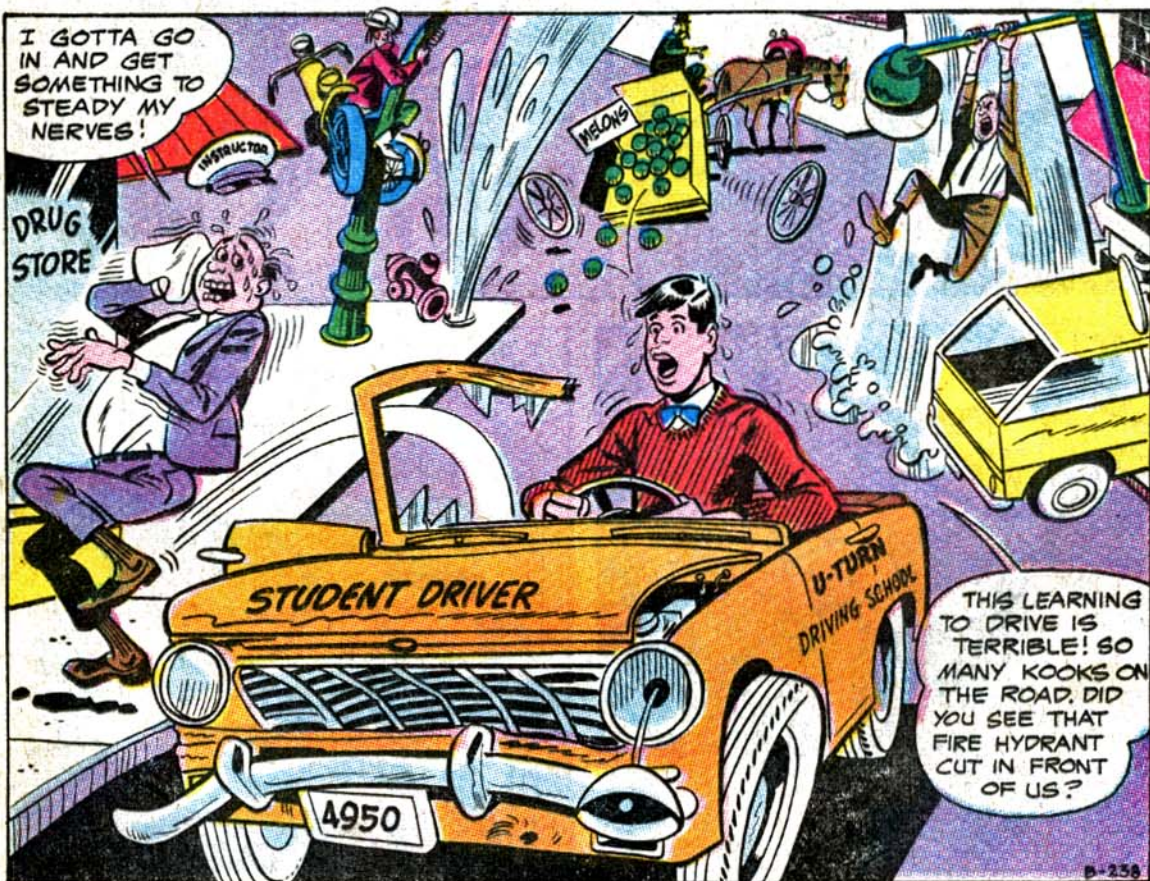

Renfrew said he'd make up for it to me. But I caught him—he picked up a new hubcap, only the car was still in it!

When I got home from the studio the other day, he was chasing cars. I noticed there wasn't a cat on the street, and the postman complained Renfrew had bitten him on the leg. I didn't understand what had happened to him until I noticed he'd eaten a whole can of dogfood by mistake!
