A NOTE FROM THE NELSON FAMILY

Dear folks:

Imagine our surprise when they told us they wanted to do a comics magazine about us!

Music, movies and radio were old stuff to us, of course—particularly radio, because our show, THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET, had become sort of a fixture in lots of American homes. But a comics magazine—!

We had a big family conference and decided we liked the idea. David and Ricky figured they might even get a free subscription. So we said "Yes."

All of a sudden the house was full of editors, writers, artists, photographers. We found ourselves working pretty hard at something brand new—and we found ourselves liking it.

This magazine is the result. We hope you'll like it.

Sincerely,

Ozzie

HOLLYWOOD CYCLES

THE bicycle, a star prop of early Keystone comedies when cops and comedians such as Buster Keaton chased one another through a snappy two-reeler on a two-wheeler, is making a comeback of its own in Hollywood these days.

Bing Crosby took up biking recently on a dare from his four cycling sons. They challenged "the old man" to a quick race around the Crosby grounds. With bandages and splints nearby, just in case, Crosby Senior pedaled the pants off his sons and threw in a few choruses of "Bicycle Built for Two" while doing it. The Groaner's bike has all the gadgets: reflectors, horns, chimes, and a name plate reading, "Everett's brother, Bing".

Bob Hope also believes in signs for his two-wheeler. The latest one reads: "Bob Hope — available for private parties and banquets". In one sequence of his latest picture, "Easy Does It", Scoutmaster Hope leads a scout cycle troop through a series of free-wheeling, hilarious adventures. Mr. Hope's private bike, minus the "Available for Parties" sign, was used in the film.

Having summer all year round in California—except for some heavy dew—filmland ladies, among them Lana Turner, Dorothy Lamour, Janis Paige and Teresa Wright, use the bike to keep their spirits high and their poundage low. It's a beauty hint worth following!

Joan Leslie had no difficulty in riding the bicycle given to her by her studio—she once did a film dance routine built around a bike ride.

The queen of the cycling movie stars is Anne Revere. She figures that she has covered 20,000 miles on her two-wheeler since she started regular bike riding during the wartime gas shortage era in 1942.

Bicycling between pictures is a film term used when a star works in two pictures at the same time. When Macdonald Carey went into "The Street of Laredo" while still working on retakes for "Bride of Vengeance", the term took on a double meaning, for Carey pedalled from one end of the studio lot to the other in getting to the two widely-separated sets.

The most ambitious bicycle team in the film capital is Alexis Smith and husband Craig Stevens. World conditions permitting, they hope to take their bicycles to Europe next summer for a tour of the Low Countries.

Another entry in the cycle sign department comes from Bill Holden. His reads: "Low Budget Westerns—Bill Holden".

Among leading men, tough guy Alan Ladd recently took steps to keep friends from "borrowing" his bicycle, leaving him stranded in a remote corner of one of the vast studios. The Ladd two-wheeler now has a scrawled placard warning, "Ex-nay, Brother".

Western star Joel McCrea has the cast and crew of his pictures betting on how soon he will break his expensive neck. McCrea rides his bicycle back and forth from dressing room to set with his spurs on!

Then there's the talented Barry Fitzgerald who recently joined his film side-kick Bing Crosby ("Going My Way" and "Welcome Stranger") in the ranks of avid pedal pushers. Barry's bike was a St. Patrick's Day gift from his fans. The only thing the Oscar-winning Irishman can't understand is the choice of color—his bike is fire-house red, instead of the Irish green you'd expect.

The dean of Hollywood cyclists is hefty movie menace Thomas Gomez. He pedals as much as 125 miles a day. At one time he shed 50 pounds of overweight by cycling from New York to Cape Cod!

Bicycles have "starred" in a number of motion pictures, notably the recent Dore Schary film, "The Boy With Green Hair", and the Dennis Morgan-Janis Paige musical, "One Sunday Afternoon". The biggest extra call of the year was issued for the bicycle number in the latter. One hundred and fifty atmosphere players, most of them on bikes, were required for the scene.

Hollywood's use of the two-wheeler both in and out of movies, has been an important factor in the amazing growth of cycling in the United States. Before the war, bikes were popular only with kids. Today there are 18,200,000 riders in the United States—the largest bike population in the world—and many of them are adults!
