Let's face the truth about UNDERARM PERSPIRATION ODOR

 $M^{\scriptscriptstyle ext{EN DO TALK}}$ about girls behind their backs-although they won't admit it. Is a girl pretty, a good sport, a smooth dancer? The answer quickly goes the rounds!

They talk about other things, too. About the girls they hate to dance with -the girls they simply won't take out. For a girl must be more than pretty and smart. She'll never make a hit with men unless she is truly sweet—nice to be near.

Unpopularity often begins with the first hint of underarm odor. This is one fault that men can't stand - one fault they can't forgive. Yet any girl may offend this way, if she trusts her bath alone to keep her fresh!

Smart girls-popular girls-don't take chances! They know a bath only takes care of past perspiration—that they still need Mum, to prevent odor to come.

MUM LASTS ALL DAY! All day or all evening long, Mum's protection is sure.

MUM IS SAFE! Mum does not stop healthful perspiration. Even after underarm shaving it never irritates the skin. And Mum is completely harmless to fabrics-safe to apply even after you're dressed.

MUM IS QUICK! One half minute is all it takes for a dab of Mum under each arm! To be a girl men like to have around, use Mum every day and after every bath.

FOR THIS IMPORTANT USE, TOO Thousands of women use Mum for Sanitary Napkins because they know Mum is so gentle, so sure! Don't risk embarrassment! Always use Mum!

Dad, PLEASE STYLED FOR SPRING

No.1322—The lines of this soft angora sport blouse cling flatteringly to the youthful figure. Smart details lend an air of distinction to a practical sweater.

No.4207—A model that will work wonders for you, this smart two-piece dress with striking marked trimming is plain crocheted in a simple stitch

FOR THE knitters this month, we have a smart classic sport blouse, knitted in simple chain stitch of sport angora, a yarn just made for light spring sweaters. The lines of this blouse are youthful and cling beautifully to the young figure. The small collar sets off the butterfly bow, which is trimmed with leather buttons to match the belt. Make this in your favorite pastel shade and wear it right into the summer.

You'll be surprised to learn that the stunning white two-piece dress with its striking marked trimming is crocheted of light airy cotton in a simple stitch that even a beginner can master! The zipped front is not only new, but convenient. The pockets are cleverly fas-tened with tiny white tabs drawn through slits on the pockets, and the slightly puffed sleeves give a flattering illusion of width to the shoulders.

Spring is just around the corner, so be ready for it! Clip the coupon and send for these new designs today.

Even if you've never tried knitting at all up to now, you'll be compared to see how you'll be amazed to see how quickly these things will work up.

 In Old Chicago

As a lusty and exciting chronicle of the growth of a great American city, "In Old Chicago" ranks high in 1938's list of good pictures. The Chicago fire, of course, is the film's highest dramatic pictures. The Chicago fire, of course, is the film's highest dramatic point, and the blaze caused by Mrs. O'Leary's famed cow is in a class with "San Francisco's" earthquake and Mr. Goldwyn's earthquake and Mr. Goldwyn's "Hurricane" for sheer thrills and technical perfection.

The producers have built their story around the O'Leary's, and have made the fire and the growth of Chicago a background for have made the fire and the growth of Chicago a background story around the family's personal history.

Here is a musical comedy that is guaranteed not to bore you. For one thing, the story could stand on its own without the addition of a single song-and-dance number. For another thing, these numbers have a sparkle and verve that lifts them out of the customary stupendous. TODAY'S TALKIES

 Happy Landing

Sonja Henie and her silver skates score again in "Happy Landing" and, as if it were not enough to see this doll-like Queen of the Ice pirouetting "in solo," she has brought an entire ballet along with which to enthrall you! Indeed, the skating sequences alone were worth the price of admission, for they are nicely spotted and beautifully handled.

First among her supporting cast, for our ticket anyway, is that ace of clowns, Wally Vernon. He performs a "strip tease" act for the edification of newspaper men who arrive at the airport to see the edification of newspaper men who arrive at the airport to see the unreliable Cesar Romero off on a European flight. It is up to the unreliable Cesar Romero off on a European flight. It is up to the stricking the while.

The story is rather slight and of a familiar pattern, but who cares? It is excellent entertainment from beginning to end. Don Ameche gives his usual good performance, Ethel Merman tears off some hot tunes and Mr. Romero scores singularly in the role off some hot tunes and Mr. Romero scores singularly in excellent of a vain, caddish orchestra leader. The production is in excellent aste, high-lighted with comedy, pathos and good, old-fashioned taste, high-lighted with comedy, pathos and good, is unust. You will, of course, put it on your "must" list. Directorial credit goes to Roy Del Ruth.—20th Century-Fox.

A glorified western, with all the trimmings, "Bad Man of Brimstone" has all the excitement and pictorial beauty of a horse opera, plus a good dramatic story which makes the hard riding and the plethora of gun play plausible and convincing. The film is a natural for all lovers of outdoor epics, in spite of the fact that the plot never deviates from formula.

*★ Gold Is Where You Find It

Here's a lesson in Hollywood trickery. They take an old story, the one in which Buck Jones used to protect the old West from the invasion of the dreaded sheep men, dress it up with Technicolor and a cast of fairly important names, and tell you it's an epic. They're wrong. It isn't an epic.

Villains of the piece are the hydraulic gold miners who wash away sides of mountains in their quest for the stuff that glitters and wash away the crops of the honest farmers in the valleys beand wash away the crops of the honest farmers in the valleys beand wash and his lovely daughter (Olivia De Havilland) whose Rains) and his lovely daughter (Olivia De Havilland) whose learns are in the soil. Of course there is the handsome mining engineer (George Brent) and the usual complications resulting from his love for the colonel's daughter.

The picture is excellent physically. In addition, there is an exciting flood sequence which speeds up the film's closing moments. Mr. Brent, Mr. Rains and young Tim Holt perform admirably, but Mr. Brent, Mr. Rains and young Tim Holt perform admirably, the feminine principals, Miss De Havilland and Margaret Lind-Brothers.

Let our reviews be your guide in selecting movie "musts"

Andrea Leeds and Adolphe Menjou in "The Goldwyn Follies."

 The Goldwyn Follies

Mr. Goldwyn evidently sat down with himself several months ago and told him-self he'd make a musical to end all musicals. self he'd make a musical to end all musicals. He'd do it in Technicolor, he probably told himself, and he'd throw in everything from ballet to the Ritz Brothers, interspersed with large portions of Charlie McCarthy and Phil Baker. He'd even hire Kenny Baker, and thus have the only musical of the year with two Bakers in it. Then, since a musical needs actors to carry on while the cornelions are going through their while the comedians are going through their files, he probably ordered himself to sign up Adolphe Menjou and Andrea Leeds. So, patting himself on the back, he walked out of the conference room, completely forget-

We don't mean that "The Goldwyn Follies" isn't good. It is. It's a fine musical in many respects: the dancing of the gorgeous Zorina, the beautiful sets, several of the comedy sequences, for instance. But we had come, in response to an excellent we had come, in response to an excellent advance publicity campaign, expecting the finest musical of all time. What we saw was a glorified vaudeville show boasting many moments of beauty and good entertainment, but its total effect is lessened because Mr. Goldwyn walked out of that conference without a story George Gerch. conference without a story. George Gershwin's music is good, but there are no outstanding tunes. Directed by George Marshall.—Samuel Goldwyn.

Tarzan's Revenge

Tarzan really gets his revenge this time, but on the unprotected audience. We've always been one to thrill over the lusty doings of this guy Tarzan, but this time our only response was a mild interest in just what tricks the director would put handsome Glenn Morris up to next.

Glenn, as the new Tarzan, proved to be trouper but not a Tarzan. Though Eleanor Holm, as the lady in distress most of the time, hasn't lost a bit of those undeniable good looks, she lost heavily through the weak role assigned her in this one. She might possess all sorts of dra-matic powers, but you'd never guess it from the part she essays in this picture. Too bad, because the first picture venture is an important one. The plot also brings in Hedda Hopper and George Barbier as her parents and George Meeker as Elea-nor's Promised. Eleanor strays from the African settlement which they all call home and falls with bad company. About this time the director must have yelled, "Page Morris!" for in bounds Tarzan to the rescue. Well, everyone tries awfully hard, so the picture has that to recommend it. Also there's a talented ape who deserves top billing. Director: D. Ross Lederman.—

SHE SAW A GHOST IN THE BED...

It rattled no chains and shook no bones—but there was an unwelcome ghost in Mary's guest room! It hid in the sheets, the curtains, the linens. Guests saw it with horror but didn't dare mention it-until Cousin Flo saw the ghost in the bed.

The very next morning, Cousin Flo told Mary—"It's tattle-tale gray that's haunting your clothes. Your weak-kneed soap doesn't wash things perfectly clean. If you want to chase out that mean dingy shadow-to banish tattle-tale gray-change to Fels-Naptha Soap.'

And that was the end of the ghost in the guest room. Thanks to Fels-Naptha's richer golden soap and lots of gentle naptha, Mary now gets all the dirt out of clothes. COPR. 1938, FELS & CO.

YOU THINK Stu Erwin doesn't know enough to come in out of the rain? But do you know what they say about him in Hollywood? That Stu Erwin puts on the best act in town!

For he's as smart as they come, this barefoot bumpkin from Squaw Valley. He knows he'll be blundering around on the screen long after the heart-throbbers have bit the dust on the cutting-room floor.

But he wasn't always smart enough to be dumb. There was a time when he wanted to outshine them all! He wanted to emote. He wanted to play Hamlet. He wanted to be tall, dark and handsome!

It started back on the farm. He would put on a performance for the hired hands at the drop of the hat. He was the pride and joy of his parents when company came—boy, how he could do "the curfew will not ring tonight"—and make it ring!

This state of affairs lasted through high school in Pertersville, California. The teachers almost wept in unison when Stu received his diploma, for who would carry the Decoration Day programs?

Since his father had advised his taking up a profession if he didn't want to starve, Stu decided to look into journalism. But after a year of it, and after learning about reporters' salaries, Stu decided that if he was going to starve anyhow, he might as well do it dramatically. So he took the bus to Hollywood.

He didn't try to crash the movies,

BY LOIS SVENSRUD

for he just didn't want to waste time on the "bits" handed newcomers. So Stu decided to enroll in the Eagan School. It had a Little Theatre in connection with it. Stu played any role with emotional scope. He worked terrifically hard.

One day he was called into the office of the manager of a Holly-wood theatre. There was a part for Stu in a new play—and there was a salary attached!

It was in "White Collars." But the role was Cousin Henry—a local yokel if there ever was one.

"Hold on there, son," said the manager, as Stu was making blindly for the door, "let's talk this over. Now Cousin Henry is something of a simpleton."

"That's right," said Stu bitterly, "and no one's going to think I'm a sap."

"But did it ever occur to you that that's a sympathetic role?" insisted the older man. "That audiences will love you as a sap—providing you're a fine enough actor to make it human. Don't make it ridiculous—make it humorous—then the simpletons in the audience won't squirm in their seats. They'll feel of loftier intelligence and will go home remembering you. Sure, they'll think the leading man is divine, but it's you they'll remember. Because you're themselves. The people they know. Understand

STU ERWIN understood. He set about then and there learning to be dumb. And because he was a bright young man it wasn't long before he was awfully dumb.

what I mean?"

Every performance, he felt a deeper sympathy for his role. He played it forty-eight straight months. He wasn't making much money, but he was happy.

The play finally closed, but Stu was snatched up immediately to play the sap bridegroom in "Women Go On Forever" at the Morosco Theatre. He had been in it a few days when Winfield Sheehan of Fox Studios, saw the show. "That's the guy I want for 'Mother Knows Best,' that one who doesn't know from nothing," decided Mr. Sheehan, and promptly took himself back-stage to offer Stu the role of the village nit-wit. "Raw" Throat? Here's Quick Action!

Zonite Wins Germ-Killing Test by 9.3 to 1

If your throat is raw or dry with a coming cold, don't waste precious time on remedies that are ineffective or slow-acting. Delay may lead to a very serious illness. To kill cold germs in your throat, use the Zonite gargle. You will be pleased with its quick effect.

Standard laboratory tests prove that Zonite is 9.3 times more active than any other popular, non-poisonous antiseptic!

HOW ZONITE ACTS—Gargle every 2 hours with one teaspoon of Zonite to one-half glass water. This Zonite treatment benefits you in four ways: (1) Kills all kinds of cold germs at contact! (2) Soothes the rawness in your throat. (3) Relieves the pain of swallowing. (4) Helps Nature by increasing the normal flow of curative, health-restoring body fluids. Zonite tastes like the medicine it really is!

DESTROY COLD GERMS NOW-DON'T WAIT

Don't let cold germs knock you out. Get Zonite at your druggist now! Keep it in your medicine cabinet. Be prepared. Then at the first tickle or sign of rawness in your throat, start gargling at once. Use one teaspoon of Zonite to one-half glass water. Gargle every 2 hours. We're confident that Zonite's quick results will more than repay you for your precaution.

Florence Rice and Robert Young on tour of their "Paradise For Three.'

 Paradise For Three

In spite of there being nothing much to In spite of there being nothing much to this picture, that nothing much is so good it would be a shame to miss "Paradise For Three." The plot is one of those mistaken identity ones, the setting the Swiss Alps, and the background Viennese waltzes. The characters are Frank Morgan, Edna May Oliver, Robert Young, Mary Astor, Reginald Owen, Henry Hull, and Florence Rice. And with very little excuse for a story, they all still manage to have a for a story, they all still manage to have a fine time and give creditable performances.

Morgan is the multi-millionaire who wins a soap contest for slogans, and is de-termined to accept the prize in person, the prize being a vacation at a swank Alpine resort. His daughter, Florence Rice, sympathizes with him and so helps him to take this prize-winning trip incognito to the other winners. Arriving at the resort, too, is Robert Young, another winnah. Through a mix-up perpetrated by Reginald Owen, Morgan's valet, Robert Young is mistaken for a millionaire and the real one is put in a garret room. Then there is Mary Astor to make life interesting for anyone with money in the hotel. Having seen through Morgan's incognito she has about landed him when daughter saves all. Directed by Eddie Buzzell.-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

★★ Love On a Budget

This picture shows you how you can afford both love and orchids on your budget. Anyone would be interested in such an exposition, but it also has the Jones Family to recommend it. Shirley Deane, the Jones' eldest daughter, is now newly married to her florist, Russell

They have the love and orchids, but no furniture in the honeymoon cottage, and the only reason for this lack is that Russell is staunchly holding out against his bride's pleas to make use of that great American institution, the installment plan. The crisis arrives, though, when Uncle Charlie comes to town. Uncle Charlie is a smooth talker and it isn't long before he's persuaded Russell to take a long shot on some bad investments. It's pretty awful, the way things turn out. Particularly for poor father Jones, who has at last had the honor of town mayor bestowed upon him. It's the best "Jones Family" to date, and with practically the same cast as in the ones before, you are assured of genuinely good performances by everyone concerned. Directed by Herbert Leeds.-20th Century-

 Love Is a Headache

This newest vehicle for Gladys George will provide pleasant diversion for most audiences, although the story material is not up to the smooth performances.

Story concerns Miss George's efforts to become a great stage star, and Franchot Tone's efforts to put her over via his Broadway column. When Tone announces over the air that he is looking for a home for orphans Mickey Rooney and Virginia Weidler, an alert press-agent pounces on Weidler, an alert press-agent pounces on the idea as a publicity gag for Miss George. the idea as a publicity gag for Miss George. Tone is genuinely interested in the kids, and refuses to believe the adoption is on the level. He kidnaps the two, and Miss George, whose maternal instincts have come to the fore in the meantime, catches up with them and takes them off. Tone gets back into action just in time to be married to Miss George at the point of a female sheriff's gum female sheriff's gun.

Bewildered by the situations cast upon

 Penrod and His Twin Brother

Warners' second Penrod feature is a not too bad excuse to keep the Mauch Twins in the public eye after their work in "The Prince and the Pauper." Pets, parents. gangsters, juvenile G-men, and a case of mistaken identity are the lighter sum and substance of the picture.

Don't be misled by the title. Penrod (Billy Mauch) does not have a twin brother, but a new kid in the neighborhood is his double (Brother Bobby.) Although Penrod owns a personable pooch, the double owns a double pooch who is vicious.

The Mauch Twins handle their parts like seasoned troupers. Spring Byington, as It's burlesque from start to finish, but entered into with such apparent enjoyment by the players that you'll be in the swing of the thing in no time and find yourself clapping hands and stamping feet. The plot concerns the local yokel, Nat Pendleton, who's fighting for Humphrey Bogart, his astute manager. Nat, though, just doesn't seem to have his heart in his work and things are looking pretty dark for Humphrey—until he meets up with Louise Fazenda.

Now Louise is a wrestler, too, and besides that she's the village blacksmith with large and sinewy arms. It looks like the perfect set-up to Humphrey to match Louise and Nat in the battle of the countryside. Nat thinks it's swell, too, but he reckoned without his emotions. For he takes one look at his buxom opponent—and it's love! With the plot go some hilarious hill-billy songs and dances by the Weaver Brothers and Penny Singleton. Miss S.  A Yank at Oxford

In a fine spirit of hands-across-the-sea and commercial sagacity, his studio sent Robert Taylor to England to make a picture with Oxford University as the background. It's too early to report on the success of the hands-across-the-sea gesture, but commercially the picture is a howling success. What's more, it offers Robert Taylor the best role he's had in pictures. As a wise-cracking, cocky American athlete, Mr. T. goes to town with a portrayal that will definitely establish him among the he-men stars and do much to dispel the silly publicity about his "beauty."

Taylor, a star athlete in a midwestern school, goes to Oxford with the avowed intention of showing the English what's being done in the way of sports. He gets off on the wrong foot with his British cousins, but eventually, of course, everything is adjusted. The picture is most entertaining during Taylor's belligerent period, and sags only when Lionel Barrymore, as the proud father, indulges his penchant for chewing scenery.

Backing up the swell performance by the star are several expert characterizations by British members of the cast, notably Robert Coote, Edmund Gwenn, Griffith Jones, and Vivian Leigh. Maureen O'Sullivan is adequate in the feminine lead. Directed by Jack Conway.—M-G-M.

★★ Arsene Lupin Returns

Those of us who had given up Arsene Lupin, the French super-thief, for dead are in for a bit of a shock. He's back again, as a gentleman farmer in love with Virginia Bruce—both highly commendable occupations. Arsene has assertedly given up his life of crime, but he becomes seriously entangled in a series of events built around an emerald necklace belonging to Virginia's family. For several reels, skeptics in the audience will doubt M. Lupin's sincerity.

The picture is a fairly interesting mystery thriller of the smooth-as-satin school. Not particularly violent, it turns into a SKIN that glows naturally bespeaks ra-A diant health beneath . . . it is alive . . . stays fresh! So, be good to your skin from within and it will be good to you.

The reason for this is quite simple . . . skin tissues must have an abundance of redblood-cells to aid in making the skin glow ... to bring color to your cheeks ... to build resistance to germ attacks.

It is so easy for these precious red-bloodcells to lose their vitality. Worry, overwork and undue strain take their toll. Sickness literally burns them up. Improper diet retards the development of new cells. Even a common cold kills them in great numbers.

Science, through S.S.S. Tonic, brings to you the means to regain this blood strength within a short space of time . . . the action of S.S.S. is cumulative and lasting.

Moreover, S.S.S. Tonic whets the appetite. Foods taste better ... natural digestive juices are stimulated and finally the very food you eat is of more value. A very important step back to health.

You, too, will want to take S.S.S. Tonic to regain and to maintain your red-blood-cells ... to restore lost weight ... to regain energy . . . to strengthen nerves . . . and to give to your skin that natural health glow.

Take the S.S.S. Tonic treatment and shortly you should be delighted with the way you feel ... and have your friends compliment you on the way you look.

S.S.S. Tonic is especially designed to build sturdy health by restoring deficient red-blood-cells and it is time-tried and scientifically proven.

CONGRATULATE THE WINNER OF OUR SCREEN STAR LETTER CONTEST WHO HEARS FROM ELEANOR POWELL THIS MONTH

EDDIE QUILLAN (first printing) From the time he was able to walk and recite, Eddie Quillan demonstrated his the-atrical ability. He was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on March 31, 1907, and it may have been significant that the home of his birth was on Hollywood Street in that city. His entire family were theatrical folk and at a very early age he became an important part of the Quillan act, touring the big time vaudeville circuits with two brothers, a sister and his Scotch-Irish parents. His a sister and his Scotch-Irish parents. His vaudeville experience, however, didn't interfere with his schooling, which he received at St. Gabriel's School in South Philadelphia. Later, he finished his education at Mt. phia. Later, he finished his education at Mt. Carmel. During the World War, Eddie served as a Four-Minute Speaker and did his work so well that Lieutenant-Commander Payne paid the youngster a signal honor in giving him a special memento of the occasion. In the early part of 1926 the Quillan troupe played the Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles, and Mack Sennett was so impressed that he arranged a screen test for Eddie and his two brothers. Eddie's was the only one that turned out well and Mack Sennett immediately drew up a contract, only to learn that the Quillan wen and Mack Seminett Immediately drew up a contract, only to learn that the Quillan family had left town with the completion of their Orpheum engagement. Mr. Sen-nett had to hire detectives to find Eddie, but he was finally located and there began a promising screen career. Since that time he has appeared in roles too numerous to list here and is at present free lancing. He's five feet, six inches tall, weighs a hundred and forty pounds, and has brown hair and eyes. His favorite sports are swimming, tennis, volley ball and golf. He is not married.

Dear Phyllis Hirsch:

I feel very proud in acknowledging you the winner of Modern Screen's Information Desk Screen Star Letter Contest, for though I am writing you a letter, think of all the votes you must have sent in for me.

We screen players may seem in a world apart to you, but in reality we are just like everybody else who works hard at a job. Making pictures is my job and the only way I know I'm succeeding at it is by the response accorded me by fans like yourself.

I sincerely hope that you'll continue to like my pictures and again, thank you for those votes.

Cordially yours,

if the child might not appear nightly at the Ritz Grill, agreeing that she would only be required to do one dance a night and could spend her days on the sand. Mrs. Powell agreed and so began Eleanor's professional career. Each winter, for several years following, the girl and her mother went back to Springfield where dancing lessons became almost a ritual. In the summer, they would return to the seaside resort and Eleanor would dance professionally each evening. Her teacher, Ralph McKernan, thought, by the time she was sixteen, that she should go to New York for a try at the musical comedy stage, but they wouldn't give her a job on Broadway because she didn't know any tap steps. Determined to succeed, she took ten tap lessons from Jack Donahue. After that, she worked alone for several weeks and just five years later she was given an award as the "World's Greatest Feminine Tap Dancer." Her first New York show was "Follow Thru." She wired her old dancing teacher in Springfield to come to Broadway to see her debut. She bought him a seat in the front row. Just before the opening of the show, her teacher died and in order to keep Eleanor from knowing what had happened, his wife occupied that seat and fulfilled her husband's greatest ambition in seeing his favorite pupil make good in New York. She appeared in many stage productions after "Follow Thru" and made her first movie for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in 1936. Her rise to screen fame was as spectacular as her stage successes and today she ranks at the top of the list as a movie dancing star. Her current-release is "Rosalle." She has always been a great lover of sports. She doesn't smoke or drink, sleeps at least eight hours a night and is too interested in her work for any serious romances. She's five feet and a quarter inch tall, weighs a hundred and twenty-two pounds, and has blue eyes and chestnut hair.

BOB STEELE (first printing) Here is another son of theatrical parents who now carries on the histrionic tradition of the family by pursuing a picture career. He was one of twin boys born to Nita and Robert N.

Bradbury on January 23, 1906. His parents were prominent on the vaudeville stage and at the age of two, Bob made his stage debut in a Fanchon and Marco comedy sketch with his father. His name was at that time, Robert Bradbury but he was billed with his father as the Murdock Brothers. When he was fourteen years old he began his screen career under the Pathe banner, making "The Adventures Of Bill and Bob," with his twin brother. He next signed with FBO and made numerous Western pictures, establishing himself as a well known he-man of the wide open spaces. Since that time he has made pictures for World Wide, Monogram, Columbia, Mascot, RKO, and Supreme Pictures. He is now under contract to Supreme. He's five feet, ten inches tall, has brown hair and blue eyes and weighs a hundred and fifty-eight pounds. He attended Glendale High School in Portland and while there starred in all forms of athletic prowess. He uses no doubles for the most harrowing scenes in his pictures and today lists swimming, tennis and horseback rid-

BOB, NOT long returned from abroad, wearing American clothes, tan and brown checked tweed coat, brown slacks and minus an English accent, joined me for luncheon in the studio commissary. It was his first appearance at the studio since his return from England some weeks before. And it would be any good fellow's idea of Old Home Week, for Clark Gable clapped him on one shoulder, Spencer Tracy on the other, Jimmy Stewart yanked his hair, Tyrone Power hulloaed to him, Reginald Gardiner made noises like paper coming off the wall and insisted that they were "ecstatic noises, welcoming noises." own individual brands of kisses; directors, cameramen, publicity men, members of the Press, gave him such a hand as would have warmed the cockles of the most frigid heart.

Bob consulted the menu, said to the hovering waitress whose whole mind did not seem to be on her job, "Something light, please, like steak and potatoes and onions."

"Hi," I said, "what about the fruit salads you used to order for lunch? You haven't gone roast-beef-of-old-England on us, have you? You haven't changed?"

"Gosh, no," laughed Bob, "not me. What's all this about my 'changing' anyway? You might suppose I'd been gone ten years in the wilds of Tibet or somewhere. Instead of which I spent four months in England doing exactly what I do here at home. The only way I've changed is that now when people mention the Champs Elysee I can look intelligent. When folks speak of the Place Vendome or the white cliffs of Albion I can adopt that bright expression of one who is in-the-know.

"I can also look knowing, knowing nothing, when old wines are discussed, the aged vintages of Italy and France. I can act discriminating about roast beef and Yorkshire pudding. When the low fogs of California chase me off the tennis court, I can wave it away with dour comments about the pea soup fog of dear ole Lunnon. In other words, I can lie more convincingly now than I ever could before, because now I have travelled."

AND THAT is true. Bob is much as always, for always he has had a nice dignity, a quietness, a certain mature fund of reserve which has instilled what in any other young man would be surplus good looks, with something deeper than looks, a something you respect.

Now that dignity is, perhaps, a little more pronounced; that quietness and sense of soundness and steadiness emphasized. Whatever of adolescence belonged to Bob Taylor, whatever of the collegiate, went overboard somewhere between here and England.

Barbara Stanwyck talked of Bob, on the eve of his departure for England, and she said, "Bob will soon be in England, making a picture. He will be away for four months, possibly six. Certainly when he goes, all my affection goes with him. That's true now, today, as I say it. Who knows about tomorrow? I don't. Perhaps it is the best thing that could happen to us, this separation. We have been together every day, every evening for the past two years. We don't know whether we can live happily, one without the other, or not. This parting should tell us, one way or the other. If we find that we can't, then, when Bob comes back, we will stop this dilly-dallying. We have a great deal in common, Bob and I. When Bob is in England he must go out, entertain, be entertained. We have talked it over very sensibly. We are not engaged. We are not married. If we were either it would be different"

Remembering this, Bob smiled and said, "Well, now it's 'tomorrow' and nothing has changed. We still go together, Barbara and I, just as we did before I went away. It is exactly, for both of us, as though that interlude, that interruption, had never happened. We spend all of our free time together, every minute of it, just as we did before I left. And we spend all of it in the Valley, at her place or at mine. We never come into town, haven't been in since I got back, several weeks ago. We sometimes go to a movie in one of the neighborhood houses in the Valley. We play games and listen (Continued on page 78)

HONEYMOON HOME

COME WITH US ON AN INTIMATE VISIT TO MIRIAM HOPKINS' DREAM HOUSE. SMALL WONDER IT ECHOES LAUGHTER AND CONTENTMENT, YOU'LL AGREE

SHE SAW it first from an airplane. A Continental-looking house with a single turret, standing on a promontory overlooking the whole of San Gabriel Valley and the sea. Behind it rose the mountains, picturesque, dark, verdant.

"What a perfectly perfect spot!" said Miriam Hopkins.

"It belongs to John Gilbert," explained the stewardess. It was the home he had brought Virginia Bruce to as a bride. The place where he had arranged for her the most luxurious suite in the whole luxury-loving Hollywood. A lush Louis XVI white satin wonder suite with solid gold fittings in the bath.

Later, after Gilbert's death, the place was auctioned off to a mysterious buyer. Some said it was Marlene Dietrich. Some, a Spanish refugee princess. It turned out to be Miriam Hopkins.

Slim, blonde, scintillating Miriam. The girl who swishes through life on the tail of a comet. Here today, off to Europe tomorrow. Irrepressibly gay and gathering momentum as she goes. How would she transform that house into a background for herself? Frankly, I thought it was going to be French. French and feminine as a lace frill. It's neither. It's almost strikingly simple. I don't know what happened to the gold faucets, but they're not there. Not a touch of frou-frou in

"I loathe the word 'modern'," declared Miriam, who happens to be as modern herself as a Thurber drawing. "Please call my house anything but that!" I call it charming.

She never does anything by halves. She sent for an interior decorator and worked with him in a fine frenzy until the last ash tray was in place. So that when you see her house you see Miriam. Her own ideas and her personality are reflected in it as if it were a pier glass.

Shortly after she moved in she came to a certain decision—and Hollywood pricked up its ears over the news flash: "Miriam Hopkins Weds Director Anton Litvak in Yuma." Litvak, who is blonde and laughing, too, and as big as Miriam is small. (Strangely, they fell in love while he was directing her in "The Woman I Love!")

"Do I carry you through the door even though you've been here before?" he teased.
"Indeed you do!" said young Mrs. Litvak. The house echoes their laughter, their deep content-

LOVE IS OUT!

BY JAMES REID

> "I've given up a lot to become a singer," declares Nelson Eddy. "There are books I'd like to read and shows to see, but I haven't the time for either."

Nelson has luncheon in the studio commissary with Eleanor Powell. A new romantic duo? Just you step up to Mr. Eddy and ask that question. We dare you.

ROMANCE RUMORS HOUND NELSON EDDY EVEN AS BILL COLLECTORS HOUND YOU AND ME—BUT J'ISN'T HIS HEART THAT HAS HIM WORRIED

AT THE head of a singularly happy-go-lucky group of bandits, Nelson Eddy swings down the dusty road, astride a golden-brown horse. He is their chief, Ramerrez.

On his head is a price of five thousand dollars, gold. Also on his head, is a tremendous Mexican sombrero. Over one shoulder is slung a colorful Mexican serape. His clothes are the leather ones of a hard-riding hombre of 1848.

On one side of him is Leo Carrillo, his face creased with that familiar Carrillo smile. On the other side is Leonard Penn, looking unfamiliar with a long scar (strictly make-up) on one cheek. Behind them, also on horseback, string a nondescript crew of cut-throats, loaded down with loot.

Apparently indifferent to possible pursuers, they are all singing a robust song about a playful mosquito. But the focus of attention is their leader. A carefree caballero, singing handsomely on a handsome horse.

Thus does Nelson Eddy make his entrance in "The Girl of the Golden West." A highly effective entrance. No member of any audience will be inclined to deny Jeanette MacDonald the pleasure, later in the script, of falling in love with him.

It isn't too difficult, seeing him and hearing him, to get the idea that he could be Caballero Number One of Hollywood without much struggle, if he were really interested. But he isn't. He told me so. We were in his dressing-room, after the day's shooting.

"Don't talk to me about love, or expect me to talk about love," he said, pointedly. "I'll talk about anything else under the sun. But that subject is out.

"Maybe I'm in love, and maybe I'm not," he went on. "Either way, it's strictly my business. If I keep my mouth shut about it, I can't hurt anybody.

PEOPLE TRY to tell me I'm hurting myself, not encouraging more romance rumors. Don't worry, I don't have to encourage them. They'll print them anyway, true or not.

"It may be a matter of curiosity whether movie stars are, or are not, in love. But it isn't a matter of importance, except to the stars concerned. The only thing about them that's important, in the long run, is: 'How are they doing their jobs?' All right, I'm not forgetting that.

"I don't go out, running newspapers," he continued. "I fail to see why I should let the newspapers run my life. When I go out, I want to go out for fun, not publicity. When I give a party, I want my friends to have the feeling that it's for them, not for publicity. I may have a dozen people in, or forty, but there won't be a columnist, or a reporter, or a photographer in the crowd. I don't like to embarrass my guests. I believe in letting them relax..

"But don't get me started on this subject of a right to a private life, part of the time, or we'll both be here till tomorrow morning.

"And don't get me wrong. Don't get the notion that I'm a big party man in secret. I'm not. I just want to put across the (Continued on page 76)

CLAUDETTE TAKES HER MEASUREMENTS

AND ADMITS SUCCESS HAS MADE A DRASTIC CHANGE IN HER! HOW MANY OTHER STARS WOULD BE FRANK ENOUGH TO SAY SO?

BY GLADYS HALL

AT A TEA in New York some ten years ago, a fellow guest said to a dark, shy girl named Lily Cauchoin, "You ought to go on the stage, my dear." The fellow guest may have been making a pleasant remark to a pleasant youngster, just to pass the time of day. Or she may have had the gift of second sight. Whichever the motivation, the dark, shy girl said, "How?" The guest replied, rather vaguely, that she happened to be a friend of a friend of Ann Morrison, the playwright, and that she could introduce asked Lily Cauchoin.

Mademoiselle Cauchoin to Miss Morrison. "When?"

Pinned down, thus, by a force far stronger than the drifts of pleasant chit-chat at a party, the friend of the friend effected the introduction and Lily Cauchoin, rechristened Claudette Colbert (because her mother always called her Claudette, though she doesn't know why) got a three-line part in "The Wild Westcotts."

Now, mind you, Lily Cauchoin, not long arrived from France, not long bereaved of her father, had never so much as dreamed of going on the stage. She had planned to become a dress designer, possibly an artist. She knew that she had to earn her own living. More importantly, she knew that she could. Essentially independent, she had no doubt that she could make her own way in the world. But that that world would be the theatre world was as far from her imagining as that she should suddenly be offered a job in the mythical Land of Oz. The stage had simply not occurred to her. But when it did occur to her, she acted with such directness of purpose that any little obstacles which might have cluttered the pathway of a less realistic young person, fell over like the frail toy ninepins with which children play.

This is all very sedate and pleasant, but the day before Gary and Claudette slapped each other for hours, as part of the plot, of course.

Which provides Key No. 1 to the fundamental character of Claudette, now as then.

For Claudette is a realist, not a romanticist. She didn't go about dreaming that she might go on the stage, dramatizing herself. But when the opportunity came to go on the stage, she seized it with both her practical young hands. I said to her, just to check my own conclusion, "You are really a realist, aren't you?" And she said, "Oh, but definitely." She added, "I don't believe that the moon is made of green cheese, you know. I'm not that realistic. But neither do I believe that it is inhabited by a sloe-eyed gentleman made of ectoplasm.'

And so there she was, on the stage. And those three lines were, for the young novice, three whips that scourged For she was completely lacking, then, in selfconfidence, in self-assurance, not to mention her enormous lack of experience. But being a realist, and French, and practical, she held firmly to her one major motivation. which was that she had to earn her living and that here it was, on the stage, laid in her lap by a lady at a tea party.

The career of Claudette began as a mixture, a blend, of chance, courage, opportunism and necessity.

Having survived the run of her three lines, she was recommended to Brock Pemberton for the leading role in "The Marionette Man." She got it, but the play was a dismal failure, with such slams from the critics as "The play was bad enough but Colbert was worse."

In spite of this, however, other plays followed. "A run of luck" she calls it, for Claudette was then, and is now, riddled with superstitions.

She said, the other day, in her portable dressing-room on the set of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," "I am horribly superstitious. I believe that luck runs or it doesn't. And when it doesn't, you'd better rest your feet, too. I shudder at the sight of a black cat. I say 'bread and butter' whenever indicated. I make wishes on hay wagons. I look at the moon over my left shoulder. If I break a mirror I have a nervous breakdown myself. I had a spasm when Marlene Dietrich told me one time that if you look at the moon through glass, it doesn't do any good. I've nearly caught my death of cold ever since, running out in the rain and cold to look at the moon over my left shoulder with no window glass intervening."

TODAY, Claudette has completed the conquest of Broadway, and put Hollywood into her make-up box and walked home with it, trailing the stardust of such spectacular successes as "The Gilded Lily," "Maid Of Salem," "I Met Him In Paris," "It Happened One Night," "Imitation Of Life," "Private Worlds," "She Married Her Boss," "Tovarich" and, now, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife." WHEN A man is by nature courteous, as Bill Powell is, yet finds himself on occasion in a spot where the ordinary forms of courtesy do him no good, there ensues a problem.

The problem is how to be rude politely.

Powell has solved it to his own satisfaction and, judging from his reputation for good manners, also to the satisfaction of all concerned.

When I asked him to describe his system, he said, "System? Perish the thought. I close my eyes and trust to my mother instinct. Wait a minute, though. There is one rule that works under certain conditions. Rule: Say all the bitter things that boil within you, but keep your mouth shut. In other words, preserve an impassive front and say them to yourself. Thus you purge your spirit of venom, yet hurt no one, killing two birds with one stone, which they taught me at school was an admirable feat. Myself, I don't hold with bird-killing, two stones or one. Some of my best friends are birds.'

SULTING-TO SPEAK YOUR MIND JUST ONCE? BILL POWELL TELLS YOU HOW TO GET AWAY WITH IT

Mr. Powell likes to go off on tangents. The faraway hills look greenest, and his nimble mind leaps goatlike from peak to peak, to nibble at a juicy quirk here or a fresh fancy there. This is partly good spirits, partly a flair for adventures of the imagination. I drew him back

DEBUNKING DAVIS

Sweet and demure might be the words for Bette here, but she insists she's neither. And she'll always speak her piece, out loud, tool

NEVER EXPECT BETTE DAVIS TO TELL THE TRUTH ABOUT HERSELF BECAUSE SHE DOESN'T KNOW HOW, BUT OUR TOP NOTCH "INVESTIGATORS" SEE ALL, KNOW ALL AND WHAT'S MORE—DISCLOSE ALL!

BETTE DAVIS' blue eyes were bright with fury. She got up from the divan, picked up a magazine that was lying on her library table, and flung it open contemptuously. Then, her voice like a whip, she read, "I know that a blonde (the type I am) is supposed to be something of a gaiety girl—in for fun and petting parties and gin and this modern thing called 'freedom.' I never have any fun. I couldn't swallow gin. Petting would turn my tummy upside down.

"That writer was supposed to be quoting me," she said, her voice rising angrily. "What are people supposed to believe, that I read nothing but grave books and medical essays? Why, all my life I've never had anything but fun. And as for not liking the taste of gin, I guess I can drink as much as most girls. What will people think of me?" she demanded indignantly.

Bette didn't know how funny she was being; how utterly incomprehensible from an interviewer's point of view. For it is something unheard of in Hollywood for an actress to resent being painted as better than she really is. Most Hollywood girls would like to be portrayed as little tin angels. They think that the fans might be shocked to know that they dyed their hair. They would rather the public didn't know how much and what they drank.

Hollywood is full of masqueraders. But the strangest of all the masqueraders is Bette. In almost every interview she has given, Bette has lied about herself. She has painted herself to the world and to her fans as a completely selfish person; a hard-boiled soulless young vixen without family ties, without any real loyalty to her husband, a woman who'd trample on everyone and everything to become a success.

"I am hard-boiled," she has said. "I am ruthless. I am not in human bondage to anyone or anything except myself. I am a completely selfish person."

Never will you get the truth about Bette from Bette herself. So this picture must be drawn from what I actually know about Bette and what I have gathered from the people who know her best.

The day I first met her, she was making personal appearances in New York, right after she had played with George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God." I waited for her downstairs in the lobby of the theatre, hoping for an interview.

Suddenly a man, obviously drunk, a shabby, disreputable looking creature, approached the doorman and said that he wanted to see Bette, that they had once been in the same show together.

The doorman went into a little side room to 'phone up to her dressing-room and he came back and said, as though he could hardly believe the words he himself was speaking, "Miss Davis will see you right away."

He turned to me and, looking bewildered, he said, "Gee, I don't know what she wants to see him for. I told her that he was drunk and that he just wanted to make a touch."

So I wasn't very much impressed when several years later, she gave out an interview in which she said, "I have no sort of use for the under-dog. Women never have. They never 'mother' the under- (Continued on page 100)

Bette and Hubby Harmon Nelson do a little stepping out. Cruel gossips have whispered that every time he buys her a corsage he uses her money to pay for it. Nothing infuriates Bette more, she violently declares, because it isn't true.

Bette's young sister, Barbara, was the reason why Bette stayed at one studio even though she felt it might cost her her entire picture career. At the time it meant money, however, and money was badly needed in the Davis household. THERE WAS considerable commotion in the O'Brien household. Jane was missing again!

While her mother was frantically searching for the strayling in clothes closets, hidden nooks and under the rear porch steps, the two-year-old Jane was giving her first dramatic performance in the gloom-laden secrecy of the attic.

In the audience was her amiable teddy bear, sitting all attention, her vacuous-eyed rag doll, and the incessantly approving papier-mache duck, whose hinged neck bobbed up and down to every vibration. Jane's appreciative audience was drafted into the cast when the dramas of derring-do demanded it. After her plays, Jane always had an elaborate tea party for the cast.

You know that child today as Jane Bryan, a girl who, without professional experience and little training, has in something less than two years, been certified for screen

By classic standards, Jane Bryan is not beautiful. But she fulfills the modern idea that the first requisite of beauty is an electric, vital emotionalism mirrored in a mobile face. Jane is the American ideal-sweetness and strength; a dreaming quality combined with an understanding of reality, a fine hopefulness, youthful sincerity, a bubbling, overwhelming aliveness.

A very young nineteen she is, in her blazing enthusiasms and sudden descents to despondency.

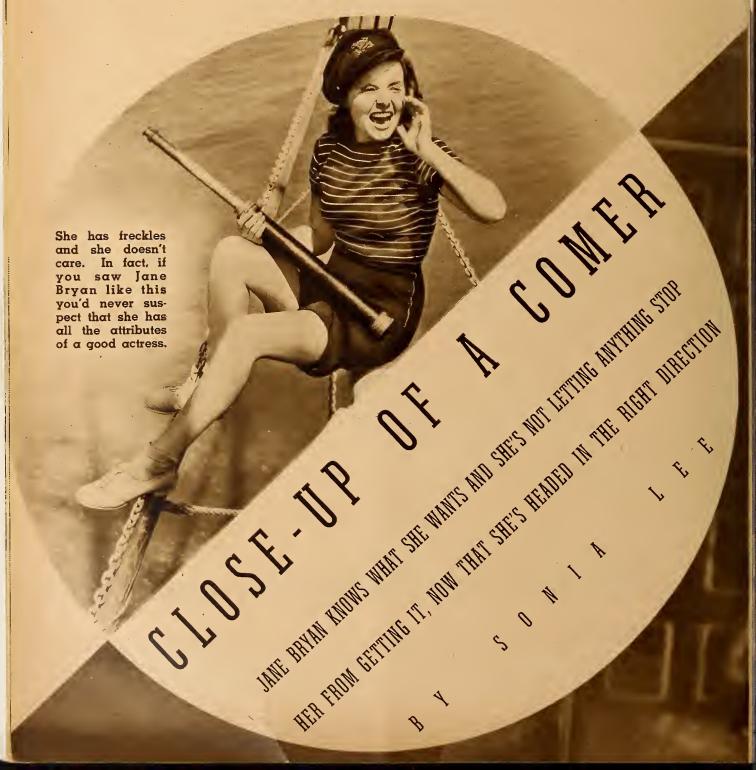

"I am either frightfully happy or frightfully unhappy," she confesses over the luncheon table. "Do you think I'll ever find a middle ground?" she asks wistfully.

She is as alive, as refreshing as a tumbling brook with the noon sun shimmering in its folds. There is not one atom of sophistication in her system.

Her hair is wind swept; her face generously peppered with little girl freckles; her mouth is wide and sweet and parts often in laughter over strong, white, even teeth. Her clear, straightforward eyes, under their sensible eye-brows, have humor and seriousness in them.

I'LL CALL myself John Murdock. If I were to tell you my real name, chances are you wouldn't know it anyway. Nor are you likely to remember my face. It got into the papers exactly once, the first time I flew to Hollywood to visit my famous wife.

My wife's name isn't Mona Carne, but I'll call her that. You all know her. You've waited for her latest picture to open in your theatre. You've thrilled to her dark beauty. You've wept with her, laughed at her madcap escapades. Perhaps you've envied her, thinking, "She's so radiant. She must have happiness as well as success. She must have love!" If you're a bachelor, I'm sure you've also envied me.

If you have, it's a sorry joke. Because the lovely girl of the screen is not a very happy woman. Nor am I a happy man. Our marriage has, through no fault of hers, through no fault of mine, reached a crisis. We're still crazy about each other—yet it doesn't seem we can go on.

Does that sound strange? Well, ours is a strange story. Maybe it's just that a star shouldn't try marriage with a man outside the picture business. It isn't only that three thousand miles lie between where her work is, and where mine ought to be. There's the huge difference in income, in mode of life.

I'm a physician, you see. My life belongs to science more wholly than it can ever belong to a loved woman. If I compromise with my work, the price is self-respect.

It wasn't like this I dreamed my marriage would turn out! Through the years of medical school and interneship, I thought of Mona as the fragile girl next door, ripening into the wife whom some day I would cherish.

Mona and I have always known each other. Dad was the Carne's family physician, and often, when she was still a spindly-legged little girl, I remember her rushing into his office. "Uncle Murdock, please do something for my sniffles."

Sometimes I was the one to do the doctoring. I was in medical school when Mona was fourteen, and the difference in our ages—eight years—seemed enormous then. I was, she said, her grown-uppest friend. She'd come to me with her troubles.

In the course of time her problems became boys. "Dick Smith tried to kiss me. I shouldn't let him, should I?" It was a shock, my little Mona (Continued on page 108)

WELL, I'LL tell you," said Jimmy, his sad voice sadder than usual, "Daisy said to me this morning, she said, 'You're very hard to cook for, Mister Jimmy,' and that's what I mean about inconveniences. If I had a wife, now, she could cope with Daisy.

"Daisy," continued Jimmy, "is our cook."

I was conscious of a pang of disappointment. I had hoped, not unreasonably, that Daisy would prove to be a romance, perhaps one of those sirens who ensnare the feet of the unwary bachelor.

But Jimmy said no. Jimmy, it may lighten the hearts of sub-deb America to know, is not in love. Jimmy is not contemplating matrimony. Jimmy is not involved. He is heartwhole, fancy free and both feet loose, despite the newspaper rumors linking his name with Rosalind Russell, the shadow of the altar in the foreground. Jimmy was polite but firm. He is not, he insists, altar-bound. Still, there are those about town who insist that the glittering new sparkler Roz sports on the important finger is a gift from Jimmy.

"Daisy," continued Jimmy, "cooks for me and for John Swope and for Josh Logan, in our place in Brentwood. She also cleans the house and picks up our clothes which we always just step out of and leave lay. She does our laundry, answers our phones, sends our clothes to the cleaners, makes our beds. In fact, Daisy does everything for me except act my parts in pictures. She may be doing that before long.

"The reason Daisy said I was hard to cook for was because I complained about a salad. Now it was a nice enough salad; it is a nice enough salad, I should say, for if you think I'm not going to keep on getting it, you don't know Daisy as I know Daisy. It's a very nice salad, sort of complicated and incognito and all that. But I don't like to have the same salad every day no matter how worthwhile it may be. And I told her so. I kind of yelled, I guess. We all yell at Daisy, all the time, about everything. And she looked very superior and said that she had made this salad for years for the best people and that the best people write her fan letters about the salad and ask her for the recipe and all, and that she gets many more fan letters, she'd like me to know, than she's ever noticed me getting. And that they all say that their lives are not worth living since Daisy and her salad have gone away, and that there is more genuwine emotion in her fan letters, she'd like me to know, than she's ever noticed in my fan mail or in the fan mail of anyone like me.

"And when I yelled, 'I still don't like it!" well, it was then that Daisy said grimly, 'you are very hard to cook for' and went out, slamming the door behind her and muttering that she wasn't interested in going into the matter any further.

SO YOU see," said Jimmy, almost apologetically, "the inconveniences of being a bachelor are not what you might expect, not all about girls and dates and all. Most of the girls I take out, like Roz and Sonja Henie and Ginger and one or two others are in pictures, too. And they know how it is if I have to call off a date at the last minute or ask for a date at the last minute. For the past four months I haven't had any conveniences or inconveniences about what to do with my spare time because I've always known what I'd do, work. I've been doing "Benefits Forgot" (I consider it the best part I've had since I came to Hollywood) and I've been doing radio, which is exciting to me and now I'm working in "Vivacious Lady" with Ginger and, well, I haven't even had time to make a date, let alone break one. I haven't even had time to get my hair cut, which you may notice from the kind of Byronic effect I'm sporting. How d'you think I'd look with braids? I certainly haven't had time to think of getting married because you have to have time to fall in love first, and I tell you, if there's any convenience at all to being a bachelor it's that you don't have to worry or think up apologetic speeches when you have to work late every night for weeks. All I have to do is call Roz or Ginger or Sonja and say 'Look, I'm working tonight' and they answer, 'Okay, I know how 'tis' and that's that.
"Yep, the inconveniences of being a bachelor are cer-

They have all the luck. But do they?

If you will follow me in a game of truth that is going to be pretty uncomfortable some of the time, I am sure we can find out why these girls are in the money and the limelight while you are—just where?

When mama told you to practise on the piano for a whole hour, did you kill time pretending to look for your music, drum aimlessly away on last week's lesson instead of struggling with today's, and then move the hands of the clock ahead? When you finished school did you heave a sigh of relief that that was over at last? When you have set aside an evening for altering a dress, or doing posture exercises, or brushing up on typing speed tests, do you do it right then, or do you put it off until tomorrow if the boy next door asks you to go to the movies?

DON'T TELL ME; I fear the very worst. And I am going to be very cruel and tell you that all the luck in Hollywood couldn't make you a success in pictures if you haven't the stamina to concentrate on your own development, no matter how many times the phone rings, or who is determined to get a crowd together for

When Virginia Bruce went to New York to be a featured show girl after playing small parts in several pictures, she could have been the belle of the night clubs. Invitations poured in. But Virginia figured it was time for a turning point in her career, and she wanted to be ready for it by filling in gaps in her education. She had always done well in English and history in high school back in Fargo, North Dakota, but started working in pictures before college courses for which she had registered in Los Angeles began. So, instead of going to parties, she sat in her hotel room at night and read the plays of Eugene O'Neill, seeking to figure out why he was such an important influence in the modern theatre. Then she delved into theatrical history, reading all the old plays of Sheridan and Congreve. The moment she and diction and dancing lessons. With no one but herself to care if she practised regularly, either.

Bette Davis helped pay her way through school by waiting on tables, and had to do her studying at odd hours. Later when she was making the dreary rounds of managers' offices in New York, friends insisted that she needed some diversion and begged her to go out nights. If a worthwhile play was suggested, Bette went, but if it were just dinner and dancing and fun, she stayed home. She read dozens of plays, learned parts that she never expected to play. She was just sharpening up her tools for the jobs she would have some day.

Rosalind Russell has perhaps the most thorough educational background of any girl in pictures. She has travelled a lot, associated with cultured people all her life, vied with six lively brothers and sisters in every competitive sport. Theology was her major interest at Marymount; journalism, chemistry and French were attacked with gusto when she was at Barnard. She followed this with courses in stagecraft and acting and diction in dramatic school, but she still figures she has a lot to learn. She digs into any books that she thinks will help her today, not tomorrow.

Maybe you are hooting now at the suspicion that I am going to tell you Simone Simon is the studious type. Well, she isn't in the ordinary sense, but she (Continued on page 96)

TALL, STRAIGHT as an arrow, with brown hair and eyes, Robert Kent is a little more than just good-looking. There is a boyish quality about him that makes him seem less than his twenty-odd years, and his frankness and cordial manner contradict his confession that he sometimes has been guilty of carrying a chip on his shoulder.

There never was an actor who didn't honestly believe he had something to "grouse" about, and Bob is no exception. He thinks he made too many movies during the past twelve months. "People will get tired of my face," he fears. He had little time to rest between pictures and was tired out and just recovering from influence.

was tired out and just recovering from influenza.

"I couldn't even have the 'flu' in comfort," he complained, "because I was in the middle of a picture and had to get back to work in order not to hold up production." And it was a fact that for a few days they were virtually holding him up, he was so weak, in order to get him through the film.

Bob was born Douglas Blackley. His father was a Scotch-Canadian wall-paper manufacturer, who died when little Douglas was six years old. In order to support her son, Mrs. Blackley secured a secretarial position. She put Douglas in the best schools, but he never stayed long in any one. The curriculum demanded too much history and algebra, and didn't devote enough time to drama to suit Douglas, who, at an early age, showed a decided preference for that subject; and so it happened that sometimes he was expelled, and other times he got the idea of leaving first—and did.

"Douglas never wanted to do things exactly the way he was told," his mother says, which may account for the fact that he often says "no" when he might say "yes," if he didn't think he was being pushed around. As one friend of his describes it, "he puts up his elbow to ward off a blow before the other (Continued on page 70)

BEAUTIFUL MARY KNOWS THE ANSWERS WHEN IT

away with it.

The producers tell the directors, but Mary tells beau these days. They're the producers—and gets as inseparable as ham and eggs.

SHE LOOKS like a mischievous angel," said Carl Laemmle, Jr., when he saw Mary Carlisle lunching with

"I'll call someone else to talk money with you," said William Le Baron of Paramount. "You'll be too tough for me to handle.'

Somewhere between those two statements lies the reason for Mary Carlisle, movie actress. She got in, like so many others, on the strength of her pretty face. Unlike so many others, she stayed in, on the strength of more than prettiness.

Mary got her first break, but followed it up with no smashing hit to establish her snugly in the minds of producers and fans. No one was interested in furthering her career, not even an agent. She was backed only by herself and her own good sense. And it's the latter commodity, even more than her blonde beauty, which has lifted her from the also-ran class to a frontline place among Paramount's comers.

A little over five feet, with cornflower eyes, a beguiling smile and hair the color of ripe wheat, she looks like the kind of girl who has only to lift her lashes in a certain way, and the world is hers. Physically, Mary Carlisle might pose as a princess, but she's a child of the twentieth century and not of a fairytale. She does lift her lashes—and her eyes are not soft with appeal, but bright with purpose. She does smile like an innocent, but the corners of her mouth curve in mockery of her own demureness.

She is a beautiful blue-eyed blonde, but she isn't dumb.

"Maybe I was when I started," she said, then, lips still parted, brought her small fist thumping down on the table. "No!" Though her eyes were alight with laughter, her mouth was firm. "I think it's just as silly to represent the broat of the large that here the broat of the large that here the large that h yourself down as to brag. If I'd been dumb then, I'd probably still be dumb. But I was fourteen and going to school and having fun and not giving much of a darn about anything else.

That was when Carl Laemmle saw her and sent his secretary over to summon her to his office. "Shall I go?" she breathed to her mother. "Of course, go." She appeared on the threshold, a "mischievous angel" of fourteen, with most of the mischief wiped from her face by awe. Conrad Veidt was there and they were all talking German, and she didn't understand a word they said. But it was in English that Laemmle finally told her he wanted to make a test of her with Veidt.

So what did she do? Spoiled her chances, as any three smart girls of her age might have done. "I tried to turn myself into a glamor girl, and made a fool of myself instead." She bought herself a pair of high-heeled shoes and a dress ten years too old for her. She had her nails stained a shrieking red and her softly waved hair shellacked into a permanent. She presented herself, teetering as if on stilts, tripping over a skirt she couldn't manage, on her face a smile of haughty unconcern, as becomes a movie star. "They were kind enough not to laugh outright. Still, I'd rather draw a quick curtain over the rest."

BUT SHE'D tasted blood, and what started as an accident developed into a firm resolve. At sixteen she put childish things behind her and went to an uncle who worked at Metro. "All my uncles seem to have worked at studios. But that doesn't (Continued on page 68)

TRICKS OF THE BEAUTY GAME

COMES THIS month, ladies, a miscellaneous bunch of beauty data which doesn't sit so hot under any particular title. However, the above label will do as well as any to hold together this issue's collection of do's and don'ts, stunts, tips and trick plays in the beauty game. Dear me, suz, I have so much to tell you, I dunno exactly where to start. I guess I'll pitch right into figures—that's always a good beginning.

A friend of mine just lost an unnecessary ten pounds in a month by going without lunch every day. She's a working girl, and she said that she had been in the habit of going out to lunch with other girls in the office, and just because they ate hearty lunches, she ate, too. Often ate much more than she wanted. However, she said she did eat a hearty breakfast and a bang-up dinner. Breakfast always consisted of fruit, two eggs, toast and coffee.

I know that when I was an office slave, I used to consume what amounted to two dinners every day, just because it was pleasant to eat and chat with a co-worker. Since I've been slaving at home, I find that a bowl of soup or a piece of fruit is all I require. This advice, of course, is only for overweights. Underweights, go right on eating substantial lunches.

And speaking of underweights, I was wondering if this advice, which doctors give for children who are picky about their food, might not work for thin people in general. That's the advice about "miniature meals." You thin people so often have capricious appetites, maybe this would work. Have a very little to eat—very often. You might actually measure the quantities you serve yourself, keep a chart on your progress, and blow yourself to something elegant when you've achieved a woman-size dinner. Start out with two teaspoons of cereal for breakfast, and try to work up to three tablespoons. Take a quarter of a can of cream soup for lunch, and work up to a whole can. And so on.

Then, too, there are the thin folks who eat like lumberjacks and, as they so often tell their friends, "don't gain an ounce, my dear!" Did you ever try lying down on the sofa with a hot water bottle on your stomach immediately after a meal? You feel rather silly, but it's a helpful poundage-gainer.

To return to overweights—married overweights who do their own housework. It has been said time and again that housework won't reduce you, but, by golly, I lost twelve pounds in about six weeks, and I can't think what else did it. I was pinched for time, and I know that millions of other housefraus are pinched for time, too—so much so While Cary Grant was making "Topper," Patsy visited the set. It was Laugh Day for the cast!

At nine, Patsy Kelly proved to be the most promising kid in Jack Blue's Dancing School.

THE WAITER brought a bottle of chili sauce and set it down, next to her dish of scrambled eggs. "I could marry you for that," said Patsy Kelly.

An hour later, upon being introduced, a reporter, from the dignified New York Times, declared she was his favorite comedienne.

"I could marry you for that," repeated Miss Kelly.

And when I asked whether, now that she is in the big money bracket, she intends building a California house and swimming pool, she exclaimed, "I haven't that much conceit!"

She means it.

Since she commenced working, at sixteen, Patsy Kelly has never been without a job, nor has she looked for one. Mentally knocking wood, she says that, up-to-date, hers has been a charmed existence. An Irish disposition, naturally superstitious, makes her positive this good luck will end. Should such an unfortunate day arrive, it will not catch Miss Kelly unawares.

She said, "I've just signed a

She said, "I've just signed a new long-term contract with Hal Roach. But what's a Hollywood contract? I can get fired, then what? Suppose my house were only half built? I'd have to marry the contractor to pay for it!"

the contractor to pay for it!"

That gives you a rough idea. For a word portrait of Patsy Kelly must be rough, drawn in thick crayon-like sentences, a caricature outline. She is a live cartoon, definitely slapstick. A dizzy wave of one hand, a round-shouldered lunge, a devastating remark, and she turns anybody's preconceived notion of a screen star into riotous burlesque.

The representative from her studio, sent to preserve caution, sat, stunned into submission. What good was his gentle negative nod, his frantic, pleading eyes? What good against Miss Kelly's corned-beef-and-cabbage honesty?

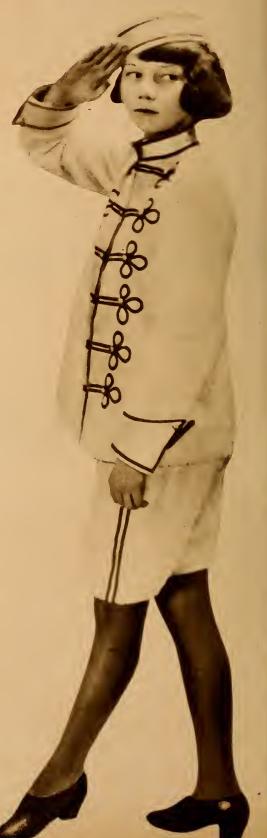

"I'm not going to be caught off guard," she announced. "Only last night I ate spaghetti in the company of a real princess. I nearly died until I saw she was having a hard time balancing it, too." Came a Kelly after-thought. "Remind me, tomorrow I got to get etiquette."

Having finished her eggs, she strolled across the room. She wore high-heeled pumps. They looked odd accompanied by bare legs. She had (Continued on page 106)

Proud Papa

Reporters have finally discovered a way to get the usually reticent Gary Cooper to talk. All you have to do is ask after his daughter. Gary, who seldom discusses women, can tell you the weight, height and disposition of this young lady, as well as furnish interesting highlights of her brief but apparently eventful life. The young lady's name, in case you don't know, is Veronica Maria. She's named after her mother, who was Veronica Balfe before she changed her name to Sandra Shaw for picture purposes.

A literal minded fan recently wrote to ask if "True Confession" were really the true life story of Carole Lombard. The answer is No. Miss Lombard, unlike Emile Zola and the U. S. Navy, has never had her personal history immortalized on celluloid. However, it's not a bad idea. You'd have a very swell comedy drama, and just look at the cast. Very few gals have Bill Powell and Clark Gable for leading men.

Lombard Preferred

Speaking of Miss L. reminds us of the writer who was being interviewed for a success story. "If you had your choice," asked the interviewer, "where would you prefer to live?" Said the guy: "At Carole Lombard's house."

Sylvia Sidney is one young lady who likes Hollywood only for practical purposes. She likes the work, and the cash involved, and she thinks it's a nice place to visit, but she prefers to live in the East. She prefers it so much that she has just bought a 13-room farmhouse in New Jersey, near the Lindbergh estate, and the minute she finishes a picture she rushes back to the farm.

But when the modernized chant became an overnight hit Warners bought it for "Love, Honor and Behave," and in the picture Priscilla Lane sings it to Morris. Most popular right now are "My Mere Bits of Shame" and "Buy a Beer, Mr. Shane." Mr. Shane, meet Mr. Morris.

It's a miniature of the regulation badge, and it has a diamond in the center. So Shirley is now a Junior Policewoman, and the chief of police has gone back to work, Incidentally, little Miss Temple is as proud of her new badge as she is over being such an important movie star, believe it or not!

Had a nice visit with her husband, and was pleased to note that nobody in Chicago goes about in a sarong.

Phrase Twister

Greatest phrase twister in Hollywood is Director Michael Curtiz, whose eccentricities of speech make Sam Goldwyn sound like an Oxford professor in comparison. Almost everyone has heard his famous crack at a prop boy who brought him an object he didn't want. "If I have to send someone so dumb," said Mike, "I go myself." And for a scene in a recent picture he wanted a horse without a rider. So he ordered "an empty horse." And a few weeks ago a visitor on the "Robin Hood" set was introduced to Curtiz by Errol Flynn. The visitor arose from his chair to shake hands. "Sit down," said Mike, "Don't relax."

In a scene for "Jezebel," Eddie Anderson is supposed to row Bette Davis through a swamp. Before they shot the scene, Bette looked doubtfully at the aged rowboat and turned to Anderson. "Can you row a boat?" she asked him. "Well," said Anderson, "I played 'Noah' in 'The Green Pastures'."

While on location for "Test Pilot" Spencer Tracy was approached by a young lady who wanted his autograph. Spence was all set to sign when he took a second glance at the piece of paper the gal handed him. It read: "Till meet you at nine." Mr. T., who doesn't meet strange women at nine, refused to sign. The girl was pretty mad about the whole thing and flounced off in a huff muttering things while Spencer could only shrug and feel uncomfortable.

This should be a lesson to young gals who are silly rather than sentimental. Speaking of this famous star—as almost everyone is these days: It must be love at Spencer Tracy's house. At Santa Anita a few days ago, Mrs. T. was busily picking Spencer's horses for him.

This could happen only in Hollywood. Benny Baker's agent, who was once the fiance of Baker's wife, is negotiating with director Bill Wellman for a part in "Men With Wings." Wellman was once Mrs. Baker's husband.

Alliqutors Before Stars

On the set of "Her Jungle Love" at Paramount, they have a large pool of water filled with alligators. Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland and several Malayan extras were drifting on a raft in the pool one day when some visitors dropped in. They spotted a couple of swarthy men in swimming trunks on the banks and asked the director in scared whispers if they were there to prevent fatalities should the raft capsize. "Oh, no," said the director, "in case the raft tips it's the job of those men to watch the alligators. They'revery valuable." Needless to say, the visitors were left quite speechless.

Carole Lombard arrived at the commissary at M-G-M the other day to lunch with Clark Gable. She was wearing an unbecoming, if not an atrocious, hat. "We've just had a fight," she explained, "and I always wear this hat until we make up."

They've Parted

Gene Markey and Simone Simon have come to the parting of the ways—and Gene's way may lead to New York where Gloria Swanson is going to make her home. For the time being David Niven is at the receiving end of the Simone smiles.

Deanna Durbin headed for New York right after "Mad About Music" was in the can. Eddie Cantor was taking his radio troupe East and we thought perhaps that was the reason for Deanna's trip. But nothing like it! "That's just incidental, though very nice," said Deanna. "Td like to see what the women in New York are wearing before I do my shopping."

Brings new aid to Women's Skin!

this new Cream with "Skin-Vitamin"

"A cleansing cream that also nourishes the skin is a great achievement"

Mrs. Arthur Richardson

Granddaughter of the late C. OLIVER ISELIN

"I am delighted with the new Pond's Cold Cream, Now that we can have the benefits of the 'skin-vitamin' in Pond's Cold Cream, I wonder how women were ever satisfied to use cleansing creams that did not also nourish!"

A NEW KIND of cream is bringing more direct help to women's skin. It is bringing to their aid the vitamin which helps the body to build new skin tissue—the important "skin-vitamin."

Within recent years doctors have learned that one of the vitamins has a special relation to skin health. When there is not enough of this "skin-vitamin" in the diet, the skin may suffer, become undernourished, rough, dry, old looking!

Essential to Skin Health

Pond's tested this "skin-vitamin" in Pond's Creams during more than 3 years. In animal tests, the skin became rough, old looking when the diet lacked "skin-vitamin." But when Pond's Cold Cream containing "skin-vitamin" was applied daily, it became smooth, supple again—in only 3 weeks!

Now women everywhere are enjoying the benefits of Pond's new "skin-vitamin" Cold Cream. They are reporting that pores are looking finer, that skin is smoother; best of all, that the use of this cream gives a liveilier, more glowing look to their skin!

Use Pond's new "skin-vitamin" Cold Cream in your regular way—to cleanse at night and to freshen up for make-up in the morning and during the day. Whenever you get a chance, leave a little on. This new kind of cream now nourishes your skin.

Same jars, same labels, same price

Now every jar of Pond's Cold Cream you buy contains this new cream with "skin-vitamin" in it. You will find it in the same jars, with the same labels, at the same price.

make me a studio relative. "Because," she pointed out, "they didn't have influence enough to get me jobs."

"I'm going into pictures," she told this uncle. "What can you do for me?"

"I can introduce you to the casting director. After that you're on your own."

"Would you work on a weekly basis?" the casting director asked the casting director asked.

"I'd work on any basis, so long as I can work."

She was sent to the studio dramatic school, and before long the coach presented her and Bob Young as the leads in one of his plays. Mayer and Thalberg were impressed with the work of both young people and put them under contract.

The seventeen-year-old might have been excused at this point for regarding the world as her oyster. "I was gay and I did have fun, but not nearly so much as I got the name for. More than anything else I wanted to work, and I couldn't understand why they put me into so few pictures.

Again she put into practice her theory that what you wanted you had to go after.

that what you wanted you had to go after. She went to a woman high in authority. "Why don't they let me work more?" she asked bluntly.

"Well, I don't know, Mary. Maybe they think you're a little flighty. Maybe if you settled down and seemed more serious—"

"Settle down, huh?" she thought grimly. "All right, I'll settle." She subdued her laughter and practised a Garbo smile. She walked sedately. Instead of waying and laughter and practised a Garbo smile. She walked sedately. Instead of waving and calling "hello" across the commissary, she bowed with dignity and murmured "how d'you do." Much good it did her. One day she was summoned to the front office. "What's wrong with you, Mary? We hear you're going high hat."

you're going high hat."

She broke into a wail. "Well, tell me what you want me to do and I'll do it."

"Want you to do? Nothing. Just don't go snooty on us."

"That was when I learned my lesson," said Mary. "I'd pretended to be a glamour girl and flopped. I'd pretended to be a grand lady and flopped. Right then and there I made up my mind. 'You're going to be just your own no-make-believe self, Mary Carlisle, and if you can't make a go of yourself, you'll quit."

MARY'S agent had a good many clients, of whom she was not the most important. Option time came along, and she was due for a salary raise. The agent told her that the option would be taken up, but without a raise

"Go in and fight for it," said Mary. "Well, these things have to be handled carefully.

They were handled so carefully that nothing happened.

"All right," thought angel-face Mary. "If he can't do it for me, I'll do it for myself."

She went to headquarters. "We'd like to head your More at the case of the server of the case of the server."

keep you, Mary, at the same salary."
"Then I don't want to stay," she told them flatly. "If you're not interested enough to give me my raise, then you're not interested

Nor was she bluffing. She knows how to face facts. "Of course I'd have been terribly unhappy if they'd let me go. But also I knew there was no sense in staying unless they believed in me. And the proof would be, raise or no raise."

It proved to be raise, and from that day to this she's been her own agent.

Not long ago she had a crucial decision.

Not long ago she had a crucial decision to make. Two companies were interested in signing her, one of them Paramount. The other offered more money. As against the larger salary she weighed these facts in the balance: she'd already made a favorable impression at Paramount. She liked the people she'd worked with and the atmosphere of the studio; at this stage in her career, money was less important than building solidly for the future, and she felt that her best chance lay with the reorganized Paramount under Zukor.

But she didn't fling herself headlong into their arms, crying: "Take me."

"I'll be glad to sign on certain terms," she told William Le Baron.

That was when he threw up his hands

That was when he threw up his hands and yelled for somebody who could handle

Mary just smiled. "I've agreed to less money than I could have got elsewhere. In return, I want the studio to take care of my fan mail, to provide my shoes and stockings, and transportation for my mother when we go on location. Also I want a three months' holiday before the contract starts. I'm going to Europe. I won't haggle about any of those things. If you want me on those terms, all right. If not—"

The terms were agreed on and she went

The terms were agreed on, and she went abroad. When I tell you that she went primarily to see Europe's great paintings, you'll probably get that pained look and say, "Oh sure." To be honest, I felt the same impulse. I, too, have accepted the cliché that to actresses, and especially little blonde ones, pictures mean moving pictures. blonde ones, pictures mean moving pictures and nothing else. Mary Carlisle shamed me out of my smugness.

SHE had another reason for taking her trip when she did. "I was just getting over a big romance," she admitted, "and I thought I'd get over it faster away from home. I did, too. Now it doesn't hurt any more, and we're the best of friends. I mean that, you know," she said earnestly. "Please don't think it's just Hollywood bunk. If two people make a mistake, why should they suddenly stop speaking and stick their they suddenly stop speaking and stick their noses in the air and hate each other? That's noses in the air and hate each other? That's good enough for children. Grownups are supposed to be sane. I don't hate this boy. I like him. And why should I stop being his friend just because once I thought we'd be more than friends? It doesn't make sense."

She flashed one of those smiles that must have been Laemmle's reason for "mischievous angel." "How I feel about it is rather mixed. I think it's silly to say you wen't mixed. I think it's silly to say you won't fall in love. I see a lot of Johnny Downs now. First, you can't help it, and second—gosh!—why should you hide away from happiness?

Just the same, I'd like not to fall in love or marry for a while yet, since I'm young and haven't done much in pictures."

BOB SPEAKS UP

fellow has thought of hitting him."

"If I happened to be on the street where there was a fight, I'd always find myself left with the fighting to do," he laughed. "Maybe I didn't know what the fight was about, but it was always little Douglas who did it and got the blame for starting it. One day I was innocently roped into a row and it ended with a cop giving me a broken nose. That cured me."

When he was sixteen, he decided it was time for him to assume the burdens of the family, so he left school permanently and got himself a job as messenger boy for the Seaboard National Bank.

"And that was one time when honesty wasn't the best policy," he told me. "I lost that job because I told the truth."

Messenger boys were required to wear their wallets strapped to their shoulders, but Bob's was always slipping off, so he carried it. One day he lost it, along with checks, money, and other valuables in it. The wallet was recovered. It was the boy's first offense, and he would undoubtedly have been excused with a reprimand if he had not admitted that he was carrying it in his hand. As an example, he was fired. Next he was riding instructor at Mt. Vernon, New York, and after that he signed aboard several boats of the Grace Line, shipping as an ablebodied seaman. He made the trip between New York and California several Toiling twenty hours a day didn't seem right, however, so he quit the sea when he docked in New York at the end of one trip.

A friend suggested that he pose as a model until he could get some other job. Posing was always fallen back on by thespians who were "resting." Finally he joined a little theatre group and while connected with it, began to make the rounds of the casting offices. His first professional role was in "Criminal Code".

In rapid succession he played in one stock company after another. While appearing with Cecilia Loftus at Bar Harbor, Maine, a motion picture talent scout per-suaded him to make a screen test. As a result Bob came to Hollywood with a Paramount contract. Then he learned that having a contract didn't necessarily mean that he was an actor. Although he appeared in several pictures, it was only in minor roles. Finally he asked for a release from his contract and went into a stage play with May Robson.

While he was appearing in this play, Darryl Zanuck saw him and offered him a contract with Twentieth Century-Fox. Up to this time he had been known as Douglas Blackley, but his new employers planned to re-christen him Robert Kent.

Bob appreciates the opportunities the past year has offered. He appreciates the chance to make money. But when he is through in pictures he wants to go into the advertising business. He doesn't want ever to be a character actor, he says firmly.

"Of course," he said seriously, "no one can say what he is or isn't going to do. That would be silly. But advertising is what I would like to do when I'm not working in citation and properties in a contract of the says in the same serious in a contract of the says in the ing in pictures anymore."

HE Kents are living temporarily in the little white house that his wife, Astrid Allwyn, occupied before their marriage. "And Doug pays the rent now," she informed me. "This house is too small for two people," she continued. "It was just the property of the property and the opposite the property of the right for me, but look," and she opened a drawer in the huge, white dressing table which she had made and which occupies one whole side of the room, "I've had to

"Well, there's your horse," Bob laughed, pointing to a little horse carved out of wood. "And there's yours," replied Astrid, pointing to another one on his end of the table.

Giggling, they explained that the horses were to be used as messengers if one ever tires of the other. If Bob should find a horse beside his plate at the breakfast table some morning, it would mean that as far as Astrid is concerned, the romance is over. And vice versa. The idea was that by using the little horses, it would save a lot of argument.

"We don't argue, because if one of us gets upset, the other kids about it," Astrid said, and Bob agreed with a nod.

They met for the first time when they worked together in "Dimples", these two, and Bob said, "I got that buzz, you know. It couldn't be anything but love

The first day of the picture Bob startled her by apologizing for staring at her. "I can't help it," he told her. And Astrid, having been in Hollywood for five years, thought to herself: "Another flirt."

They didn't get on very well at first. For instance, there was the scene where the script indicated they must kiss.
"I don't want to kiss him," Astrid complained. "It's a silly place for a kiss," Bob protested to the director, while secretly hoping it would be left in. The kiss was left in and later seemed such a good idea that they practiced it in private. Bob always fights for what he wants and he wooed her enthusiastically but without marked success. One night he had given her a sales talk

One night he had given her a sales talk on marriage all evening. It got to be twelve "All right," he said, "I suppose you think I'm not good enough to marry you."

Astrid didn't pull that old bromide about it being "so sudden," but she did intimate that they might wait a little longer. At the first hint of success, Bob took new hope and at one o'clock she said "yes". They were married the next day.

If Astrid makes the pictures she has contracted for, she will be as busy as Bob will be with his new contract. "But if the will be with his new contract. "But if the stork comes around, I'm not going to send him away just for a picture," she said firmly. "I want to have children. We both do," and Bob nodded vigorously. "When Doug gets to be a big star and starts upstaging me, I'll have a lot of children—so many he can't hide them from his public," Astrid threatened. "And if he starts bragging about what a big star he is, I'll just say, 'Well, look what a big producer I am!"

"You win!" he told her, but the look in his eyes belied his words. He has won the girl of his choice, he is winning success in his work, and it seems to me he will always win-at life.

fact that I have as much of a social life as the next fellow who has a job that takes most of his time.

"Actually, I have three jobs. I'm on the screen, I'm on the radio, I'm on the concert stage. Why work so hard? Well, I've got only so many notes in my throat, and I want to get them out while I can.

"On days like this, working from eight to six, singing the same song forty or fifty times, I get blamed sick of hearing my own voice. On days like this, I could give retirement a passing thought. If I had time. But tomorrow I'll be doing some other kind of scene, that's one nice thing about the movies, and probably looking forward to my next day of singing. That's life.

"No, seriously, I haven't any plans about retirement. Even indefinite ones. The last thing I want to do is to sit around, doing nothing. That doesn't appeal to me. The chief reason why I'm a singer is that it's the most interesting life I've encountered yet. If you know a job that's more interest-ing, bring it on, I'll consider that, too. "I gave up a lot to be a singer. I had to struggle for years, learning how to use my voice, learning how to comport myself on the stage, acquiring a repertoire. This would be a heck of a time to retire. I'm just beginning to have the fun of working out what I've learned.

"Even when I'm working, I get in one to three or four hours of practice a day, building up my repertoire. By the time we go on our tour, my accompanist, Theodore Paxson, and I won't need any music. We can walk into a concert hall with our hands in our pockets and go to work. If television reared its head tomorrow, I'd jump in and find out what it was all about, try to be ready for it.

"Accidents don't often happen in singing careers. You have to be ready for the breaks when the breaks are ready for you,

"There's been just one accident in my career. Pictures. They were pure accident. A lucky accident. I came out here for a concert, some studio executives heard me, and I was yanked into the movies. It had never occurred to me to try to be an actor. Particularly a movie actor. I had blue eyes and blond hair, which, I had been told, were what the movies didn't want. On top of that, I was an opera star, and people don't "You know about the sitting around I did, learning something about movie-making. You know about the false starts I made. But I don't think one of the reasons for my slow start on the screen has ever come out. When I first landed in Hollywood, recording equipment wasn't what it is today. Sound engineers ripped their hair when I started singing; they told me I'd have to quiet down. But I was mean. I won't fix my voice for their machines. I made them fix the machines for my voice. Now I yell my lungs out, and they yell for me to sing louder."

He leaned back, enjoying his cigarette. 'What did I give up to be a singer? wouldn't be trying, by any chance, to bring love into the conversation again? Nix. The principal thing I gave up was leisure. I gave up time to do countless other things I'd like to do. There are a lot of books I'd like to read, there are a lot of shows I'd like to see. There's a little trip to the Mediterranean I'd like to get out of my system. I'd like to sail more, do more fishing, ride horseback out in the wilds.

"There are a lot of interesting people I might have met if I had stayed in the East. But there are people out here who are just as interesting. Some of them have great stories. Listening to them sort of gets that old reporter blood in me pounding again."

That's right. For all his disinterest in newspapers today, he used to work on one, in Philadelphia. How did that happen?
"Well, I had to pay for music lessons some way. And as long as I had to have

That was one reason why I liked newspaper work. And, afterward, work as a copywriter in an advertising agency. It wasn't the same old grind, day after day. Every day brought a new problem to tackle.

"I thought I was pretty versatile in those "I thought I was pretty versatile in those days. Actually, I was just being scattery. I could write a little, draw a little, sing a little, fish a little, hunt a little. But I wasn't really good at any one thing. Because I wasn't concentrating on any one thing. I was just drifting—and I didn't know where. The day I realized that, I started concentrating. I picked singing. I had been doing that since I was ten.

"I told you a few minutes ago that I'm."

"I told you a few minutes ago that I'm just beginning to have the fun there is in singing. I used to be a much stricter musician than I am now. I had to be. A beginner can't take licenses. He has to follow all the rules of voice technique, if he wants the critics to listen to him. Just as a young painter has to paint straight, to prove that he can, before people will take him seriously

"Look at Chaliapin. One of the most popular singers of all time. Yet when he sings, the result is completely unlike the song as written. He could sing straight. But he believes in telling a story."

Nelson should know. He makes a concert tour across the country every year, singing two or three or four times a week, in as many different cities. As soon as he finishes "The Girl of the Golden West," he is starting a new tour. He has never started so late in the season before. But never before has he made two pictures in one year.

"I don't see any signs of a let-up ahead—thank God!" he told me. "Hollywood can't understand why I rush right from pictures into concerts. Hollywood thinks I must have a cash-register mind. But Hollywood has a habit of getting me wrong.

"I can use the money; I don't deny that.
But I can think of easier ways to earn it than on concert tours. I go on these tours every year for two reasons. In the first place, they sublimate my lust for travel. At the same time, facing all kinds of audiences, in all kinds of towns, under all kinds of conditions, is invaluable experience. It keeps me toned up, on my toes, constantly trying to improve.

Life's Little Close-ups; Can Your Complexion Stand Them? It Can if You Use Luxor Powder . . . It's Light-Proof! . . . This is the Greatest Make-up Improvement in Years

 Every change of light is a challenge to a woman's complexion. Does your make-up flatter you one minute - and betray you the next? Then give thanks for this discovery!

Luxor face powder is light-proof. It modifies light rays instead of reflecting them.

With a finishing touch of this powder, your complexion will not constantly be lightstruck. In any light. Day or night. Nor will you have all that worry over shine when you use this kind of powder.

Seeing is believing: Make this test

Look at the photographs reproduced here. See what havoc the light plays with unprotected make-up. See the improvement in the second picturewith light rays modified and softened by light-proof powder. A test before your own mirror will be even more convincing. Then put it to the real test of all kinds of light, day and night.

You will soon discover you can trust this powder under all conditions. It is light-proof, and it is moistureproof. Note the complete absence of shine, with that same lovely softness at all times.

We especially invite all women who think they have a "shiny skin" to make this test and see if Luxor powder does not subdue all shine.

You can get it anywhere

HAS BOB TAYLOR HAD A CHANGE OF HEART?

to the radio and fool around with the horses and read agricultural bulletins. We haven't changed. Nothing is changed. "I've come back and I've picked up just where 1 left off. I've moved into my place in the San Fernando Valley. Two miles from Barbara's ranch, Marwyck, my place is. Thirty acres, I have, with a palatial mansion of four rooms thereon! On the goodly Taylor acres I have some horses, just to galumph around on, not to race. I also grow alfalfa, the better to feed the horses, my dear. I grow citrus and a thing called pineapple guava which, my mother and Barbara assure me, can be resolved into jelly! My mother still has her house in Beverly Hills and time marches on!

"As for other items which have been hinted about my person, let's see—I do not wear English clothes. Not a sock did I buy in all England, let Bond Street beckon as it may. I did buy some English clothes to wear in the picture but what with the duty and rough wear and tear they got I gave them all away before I shipped for home. I have not a trace of an English accent, as you have observed.

accent, as you have observed.

"I did try to acquire one, at first, thinking it would come in handy for the picture when, as a Yank at Oxford I am supposed to be quite Anglicized at the picture's end. But after losing my way in a maze of Cockney dialects and Kentish dialects and dialects from Surry and Shropshire and this 'shire and that, I gave it me and stuck to the Nebraskan I was it up and stuck to the Nebraskan I was born to. I have no trouble with the old familiar right hand drive because I never really learned the left hand drive over there. My house was twenty-five miles from the studio. I didn't know the roads nor did I have time to familiarize myself with the country and so I rented a car and a chauffeur. And felt like a damned fool, if I may say so, never having been chauffeur-driven before.

I am four months and some days older than I was when I went away, there's no denying that. But whether I am older and quieter or younger and gayer I wouldn't be knowing. It all depends, I fear, on the mood, the wax or wane of fear, on the mood, the wax or wane of the moon, the hour of the night and what I've eaten for dinner," laughed Bob.

"I cannot," he continued, with pleasurable malice, "discourse learnedly or romantically about the women of other nations, don't you know, because I didn't meet the ladies. - I didn't have one single date the whole time I was away. Not one.

I STILL think Hollywood is the place of places to live. I'm modern enough, I guess, to like the white new houses, the newness and beginningness of it all. It STILL think Hollywood is the place of newness and beginningness of it all. It looked good to me as my plane sighted it, flying in. I do want, very much, to go back to England. I didn't have a chance to really see it. I didn't even do any of the touristy things. I did not see the Royal Family nor visit the Cheshire Cheese and sit in the chair Charles Dickens once occupied. I didn't visit the Tower of once occupied. I didn't visit the Tower of London nor the British Museum. But I want to go back and do all of these things. I want very much to go back to Sweden. I've always had a terriffic yen to travel. If I've changed in any way, it's in an accentuation of that yen.

"I've been asked what I missed most, looking back on Hollywood from so many thousands of miles away. You guess! Right. Naturally, I missed my mother and Barbara the most, and our friends. Next I missed my car. In the studio I missed, most of all, the prop boys and carpenters and electricians who, over here, are my friends. I missed not being able to call the crew by their first names. I got so that I could decipher their dialects after a that I could decipher their dialects after a time and then everything was jake.

"No, I wasn't homesick. I'm not the homesick type. I knew that I was coming home again, anyway and besides, I adjust easily and happily to any environment. I'm the adaptable kind who could be equally content in a hovel or in a palace, in Paris or in Peoria. Doesn't matter a hoot in hell to me where I live!"

I said, "How did you feel about your own importance in the scheme of things when you got away and saw something own importance in the scheme of things when you got away and saw something of the 'great, wide, wonderful world?' How did you feel about the importance of pictures, the importance of Hollywood?"

"I don't know that I've ever had any passionate convictions about my own importance," Bob said, "except that I feel that any man doing any job is important in his own little niche, however small. A nail-driver at work on a skyscraper must nail-driver at work on a skyscraper must have a steady hand and a steady purpose or he's apt to cause the whole structure to go havvire. to go haywire. As for Hollywood, well, Hollywood and New York are the two places everyone asks questions about, everywhere. But you know, they don't ask so many questions about personalities as they used to do, I'm told.

"Tell you one thing I learned, all right. and that's how important the foreign market is to us here in Hollywood. Boy! The foreign market can make all the difference between a star being tops on the box office list or twenty-seventh. It's a huge market, you see, wherever our pictures are freely admitted, England, tures are freely admitted, Scandinavia, France and so on.

I LEARNED, too," said Bob, "why the English actors are such swell actors—Leslie Howard, Ronald Colman, Bart Marshall, Alan Mowbray and the others. It's because they care about the theatre, never get very far away from it, will drop any movie contract, however fat, to do a would rather be paid a ha'penny worth of dried herring for a good part on the stage than millions for a picture. They care about acting, the English tradition, not care about Shakespeare and tradition, not about notoriety and noise-makers blaring how good they are. This chap Griffith Jones, who has as big a part as mine in the picture, if not bigger, he's terrific. The best ture, if not bigger, he's terrific. The best type of Englishman, long and lean, with aquiline features. I told him he'd be tremendous in Hollywood but I doubt that he would come here. Not while the old Drury Lane and others still use actors. "As for myself," said Bob, and now the depth of his voice was deeper, his blue eyes black with seriousness, "I don't care what I play so long as I can get out of dress suits, leading man things, romantic roles, all that tinsel. I've been limited, much too limited in the stories I've played in, the parts I've played. I'd play a Western if I could do one. I want to get parts where I can wear overalls, leave my parts where I can wear overalls, leave my hair uncombed and unbrushed, forget to shave for a few days. My first picture after my return is to be 'Three Comrades' with Bob Young, Franchot Tone and Margaret Sullavan, I believe. That's okay. Nothing dressed-up, fancied-up about that!"

Martha Raye knuckles down to the absorbing task of making a pastry shell for her favorite pie.

For the second step, she slowly adds a cup of pineapple juice to the rich filling of this dessert.

Our star cook now tops the filled pie shell with the fluffiest of meringue for that final touch.

EASY AS PIE! Well that certainly describes Martha Raye's idea of a perfect meal, the sort she likes so well that she frequently prepares and serves it her very own self on the maid's night out. Martha is really very fond of cooking, as it happens, so she takes advantage of this once-weekly occasion by inviting her friends to join her and her mother for dinner.

And does she shine at the mixing bowl and stove? Well I'm here to tell you she does! Furthermore she asserts that she does! Furthermore she asserts that she takes off her hat to no one when it comes to planning and dishing up, in short order, a simply grand and grandly simple meal. It didn't take long either, to discover that I could enthusiastically endorse her choice of foods.

Here then is Martha's favorite menu: Hamburger Steak with Onions

Corn Pone Shredded Cabbage and Raw Carrot Salad Boiled Dressing Pineapple Cream Pie Coffee

No potatoes, you'll notice. But if you insist, you can take care of this missing feature very simply by baking the spuds along with corn pone.

As for the rest of the meal, well, with the exception of the pie (and I'm giving you the recipe for that) it requires but the fewest words of explanation and the shortest possible period of preparation. Much of the work can be done well in advance, too. The dry ingredients for the corn pone can be measured and combined in the morning if you choose. The carrots and cabbage for the salad should be placed in the refrigerator hours early to chill, though of course you wouldn't think of adding the salad dressing until the very last moment. Hamburgers and onions require but a moment's attention and there require but a moment's attention and there you are, all ready for dinner!

But how about the pie? Well that too can be made in one-two-three fashion well ahead of time. The shell can be baked even a day ahead, if you choose. The filling too, for that matter. Then a couple of hours before dinner time, you simply spread the filling in the shell, top it with meringue and bake it slowly. A short spell to cool off and there you are. But why go into that now, when you have Martha's recipe, right here, to follow. "If you want to be really fancy," suggests Martha Raye, "you can place the meringue in a pastry tube and squeeze it out it professional belief and squeeze and out in professional-looking curleycues and doodads. But whatever you do, don't bake the meringue too quickly or you'll spoil it completely and past all hope."

Serve this delectable pie after just such a meal as the one she outlined for us and you'll discover, as I did, that Miss Raye's simple, homey menu will win you paens of praise.

$2.00 Prize Letter Who Is Queen?

It is my belief that the men of America are the victims of a grave injustice. Every time a man picks up a movie book, what does he see? Raves about Robert Taylor, Tyrone Power or Clark Gable. Do the men like this? I don't.

If it were left to the women, the fair sex in Hollywood would rarely be mentioned in fan mail departments. Are the men supposed to sit down and take this without a posed to sit down and take this without a murmur? You're right, they won't. So, girls, if you're on the level, give the girls a break for a change.

As long as the women have been given their chance to do their hero worshipping in print, suppose we men get busy and do some heroine worshipping. What we want to know is Who Is Queen of the Masculine

$2.00 Prize Letter Too Much Slapstick

When James Cagney squirted grape-fruit in his leading lady's eye, and Clark Gable struck his heroine harder than Emily Post okays, they were simply paving the way for a cycle of sophisticated slap-stick.

In "Double Wedding", Myrna Loy cracked a picture over the noble Powell brow. Carole Lombard and Fredric March have plenty of free-for-alls in "Nothing Sacred", and Irene Dunne had a rollicking good time aggravating Cary Grant in "The good time aggravating Cary Grant in "The Awful Truth". What with Miriam Hopkins doing some hair-pulling and leg-biting in "Wise Girl", Claudette Colbert biting Gary Cooper in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife", and Gladus Swartheast rescriptors.

Cooper in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife", and Gladys Swarthout receiving a lusciously ripe tomato in the face in "Romance in the Dark", it looks as though we're in for it!

The Mack Sennett custard-pie touch as practiced in "Private Lives" and "It Happened One Night" is appreciated now and then. But all this scratching, biting and packing a mean wallop—what will its effects be? Will these actresses be able to step back into "safe and sane" roles?—Mary F. Donner, Seattle, Wash.

$1.00 Prize Letter Here's to you, Martha Raye!

My letter is about the story concerning Martha Raye in the February issue of Modern Screen.

Aren't movie stars human? Evidently the columnist who panned Martha Raye doesn't think so. Wouldn't anyone who suddenly found he was making a salary large enough to make all his dreams come true rush out and buy himself some lovely clothes, a new car, and a beautiful home? I'm certain that I would; it's the human thing to do. Martha Raye, in my opinion, is a grand comedienne and as long as she continues to comedienne and as long as she continues to turn in those hilarious performances, I think she's entitled to do just about as she pleases. So, here's to Martha Raye—may she buy all the furs and dresses that she wants! It's her money, and, as she says, "You can't take it with you."—Martha Earle, Nashville, Tenn.

$1.00 Prize Letter A Plea For Simplicity

It can be recaptured, can't it? The re-freshing sweetness of "Seventh Heaven" was still there when Simone Simon and James Stewart played the roles in the third production of the picture. They are not handsome nor beautiful but much, much more. They symbolize the essence of life, youth—carefree and spirited. The secret of their acting ability is that they do not try to impress their audience. They seem to live the parts they are portraying. After all, real people on the screen appeal to us and we haven't lost our taste for real stories.

winding stairways, and impossible stories when we are satisfied with less "foo" and prefer simpler, sweeter stories with humor, pathos, and romance?—Ula Atterberry, Peoria, Ill.

$1.00 Prize Letter The Awful Truth

If more of our problems were presented to us in the vein of "The Awful Truth", we'd see just how silly and ridiculous some of them are.

In "The Awful Truth" we have a well-known problem gayly decorated with laughter and clever dialogue. Without preaching it drives home a point in a most subtle and effective manner. We are shown how a suspicious nature can make a mountain out of a mole-hill—especially in wedded life-and how this complex can nearly ruin the happiness of marriage. And most everyone thinks as the Warriners did that the divorce court is the only solution.

It's films like "The Awful Truth" which

the ceiling and fireplace panel are of pickled pine. And there's the deeper brown of fine antique pieces and the warmer brown of the sprawly loop chairs.

Miriam's paintings are a story in themselves. Sign posts of her career. For example that John Carroll lady, mounted in solitary glory above the mantel. Broadway had just begun to take the little Hopkins to its heart when she bought that. It took most of her savings but to her it was a symbol of success, of dreams fulfilled. It meant the small Alabama towhead who had started out with nothing much but spirit and a defiant young will, had reached her first milestone. The Metisse marked the second. She had scored with Chevalier on the screen and Hollywood, overnight, was distinctly Hopkins-conscious. Instead of celebrating with a mink coat she celebrated with a Metisse. Then came the Renoir (hanging above the Louis XV desk), and the two Picassos in Miriam's bedroom—evidences of the flood tide of fame. But it's as George Gershwin once said, "If Miriam didn't have a penny, she would still have beautiful things around her or make them seem beautiful."

Before his death, you could usually find Gershwin up there on Sunday evenings, sitting at the grand piano, idling over it. Miriam's Sunday evenings are famous.

MODERN SCREEN

They never start out to be parties. They simply grow that way. And you can be sure of two things—brilliant talk and a brilliant time. "Won't you drop over?" says Miriam. And half of Hollywood does. Writers, artists, composers. . . goes in for the gypsy type of entertaining, never formal "because you can't have so much fun!" Everybody sits on the floor and sings. Her cook, who comes from Prague and is a genius, shakes her head. Six were expected for supper. Twenty have turned up. But somehow. Cook resty have turned up. But somehow Cook resurrects a turkey stuffed with truffles and a dozen other miraculous dishes. How she does it nobody knows. Sometimes a small Russian orchestra appears or a miniature Tzigani band that breaks into strange wailings. But as a rule the guests supply their own entertainment.

It was at that surprise birthday party Litvak gave Miriam, that George Antheil composed a song hit right on the spot and dedicated it to her. That's the way it is at Miriam's. Somebody casually tells a story and another movie is born. Things happen there.

She'd rather eat off a tray than a table any day but occasionally she does give a regular dinner party. Never for more than eight. First, of course, you have cocktails in the intimate little bar off the livingroom. It's done all in the seasoned pine, and accordion doors open into it. just have time to discover how funny the James Thurber drawings are and how fascinating your fellow guests can be when dinner is served. You're never kept waiting.

There is not a single artificial light in the dining room. Only candlelight. Even the side brackets hold candles set in glass prisms. The drapes are the same as those in the living room, printed linen in brown and white. The walls are the same soft blue tone as the other walls and the rug is old ivory. But the furniture is original Chippendale. In the cabinet are antique sepia marine plates that were new when Cape Cod was founded. It's a straightforward room with a quaint and fluty air.

An elegant balcony opens off the dining room. And when the moon comes up over it, a gypsy band is playing softly underneath, and you're dining in the candle-light—oh, Miriam knows how to give her parties the enchanted touch!

This is not the only balcony in the house. "Maybe it's the Southern in me. Or," she chuckled, "a throwback to some sentimental aunt. But I adore small balconies. There were three of them here to begin with and I added two." Since the living and dining quarters and master bedroom suite are on the second level (remember it's a mountainside house!) they can all boast balconies.

Miriam's private one is a dream. She can lie in bed and see "half of Hollywood" over it. Incidentally, she hates getting up. She would rather sleep all day and be up all night. ("Stage training, my dear!" she The one highlight of her bedroom is—comfort. No feminine fussiness. There is a grand fireplace, a big woolly reading chair in sand color and a warm, woolly rug of the same shade. The bedspread of raw silk is in blue and those drapes are in a hand woven blue and chartreuse plaid. The furniture is bleached birch.

Over all this, presides Miriam's little French maid. Now Mimi, who has been with her for years, has a system. If Madame is in a pensive mood she lays out black velvet for evening. If she's very gay, Mimi lays out white—usually in a moire or crepe. Colors? Mais non, Madame seldom wears them in formal clothes. An occasional chartreuse, perhaps. Or a deep, rich burgundy. And for the soigné party she wears silver or gold lamés. "Around she wears silver or gold lamés. "Around the house," says Mimi, "is another mat-taire." Madame loves the little tailored pajamas and short brocaded jackets. can lounge in them—and read. Mon Dieu, how she reads! Three books a week and all the magazines."

That accounts for it. The "book corner" in every room. In the living room, of course, there are regiments of books marching up and down the walls on either side of the fireplace. Not in stilted rows. In used rows. In her own room a half dozen or so lie conveniently on the round birch table.

Neat shelves of them are within easy reach of the big leather chair in Anton Litvak's room. This is done all in creamy white and burgundy red and old mahogany. There's an interesting lithograph by Henrietta Shore on the wall-and what Anton enjoys most are those costume sketches taken from Miriam's picture, "Becky Sharp," and matted on material from the gowns she wore in that production. His room is on the first level of the house along with Michael's.

Michael, the small king of the establishment, is Miriam's four-year-old adopted son. She knows when he wakes. She's there at night when he goes to sleep. Michael has his own little dining room in blue and white like the nursery and seven million toys, but the Big Event in his life is going to the studio to watch "Mummy" work. "You see," he said solemnly, "we usually have ice cream. And the men with the lights let me play with them." I'm not given to drooling over children but I confess I'm a bit goofy over Michael.

Miriam's house is more than charming. It has that undeniable air of being a home.

"Colgate's special penetrating foam gets into every tiny hidden crevice between your teeth...emulsifies and washes away the de-caying food deposits that cause most bad breath, dull, dingy teeth, and much tooth decay. At the same time, Colgate's soft, safe polishing agent cleans and brightens the enamel makes your teeth sparkle-gives new brilliance to your smile!"

manifold inconveniences the most manifold and mammoth is the servant problem.

'Take Daisy. When she came to us we'd been without a servant for months. Daisy came to us just in time. For we'd used up every canned tamale on the premises. Our three sets of dishes were all dirty, and what to do? Our beds hadn't been made for weeks. Our suits looked as though we had slept in them, and sometimes we had.

"Then Daisy came. Our hopes raised and our tummies growled. But for three mortal days Daisy refused point blank to cook for us. Our hollow cheeks and cavernous eyes moved her not a pang. She said that she had first to arrange her cupboards. She had every appearance of a director who is displeased with a set and just won't make mudpies, I mean pictures, until the set is rearranged. Anyway, she set to work arranging them and then, while Rome burned and our intestinal fortitude collapsed she rearranged them again. She put all the china, having laundered it, on the shelves where the canned goods had been. She put all that remained of the canned goods on the shelves where the potatoes and onions had been. Then she veyed her handiwork. Then she stood back and sur-

"Our bleached bones would have been strewn about Brentwood by now had it not been for kindly folk who invited us to dinner parties, sometimes separately, occasionally together. But there is another inconvenience about being a bachelor, and a But there is another starving bachelor at that. I never can tell whether I'm being invited out for the pleasure of my company or whether I'm being invited for the same motives as prompts people to give to the community chest and the foreign missions.

DON'T know," sighed Jimmy, "but people don't seem to care about working for us. I call employment agencies and tell them what we want and they tell me they have a Jewel which they will drop into my lap quick like anything and then

If wait around the house and no one shows.

"They think it will be too difficult, I guess. Maybe it's got around that I never remember to phone that I'm not coming home for dinner until I'm just sitting down to another dinner somewhere. Maybe they think I'm inconsiderate, not the kind of person they want to know or something. Then they may have got wind of the fact that when our dinner bell is rung we alway take it as a signal to take our showers or make those phone calls we've neglected or perhaps we're seized with a nostalgia to write long newsy letters to the folks back home or something. But Daisy is very grim about this. When she rings the grim about this. When she rings the dinner bell she rings the dinner bell and we come down and eat, or else.

"Before Daisy, we had a colored couple.

We thought we were all set when they first came. The meals started out to be fine and dandy. Of course the bills were such that you might have supposed we were hotel proprietors doing a rush business. We told them that we should deal with a cheaper market, a sort of cut-ratish market. That night they brought in a sort of duck for dinner. The cook brought it in herself. She said 'this was a very tired duck when it arrived, suhs. It had circles under its eyes. But I have done the best I could with it, the life it has led and all. I have worked very hard to revive this duck, suhs, and the least you can do now is to eat it and like it.' I did eat it. And in the night it up and bit me on the ear and caused me many minor discomforts which cannot go into here as there are some things a gentleman does not make public. The duck, we were told, had limped around from the cheaper market and the inference on the word 'cheap' did not seem to apply wholly and exclusively to markets. We went back, not to the cut-rate markets but to the cut-throats.

"Well, next we began to notice an appreciable falling-off in the quantity of our food. We did a little quiet sleuthing and discovered that our treasures were passionately fond of dogs. There was every intimation that the more they saw of men the better they liked dogs. We would catch, all through the days, savory odors of cooking but when the dinner hour came we would get only what might be called a snack. They were feeding the dogs, not the crumbs from our table, but the cream of the cream, and plenty of it.

"We knew that we had to get rid of the pair. But how? Not one of us had the nerve to fire them. So there we were. We didn't know what to do. We held more conferences than movie producers ever do. At last we hit it! We'd move! We'd move out of the house and leave 'em flat. We didn't like the house any too well, any-way, we said, though we'd never said so before. But there was our out. And we took it. We just folded our tents one dark and stormy night and, like the Arabs, silently went away.

"This litany of woe," said Jimmy, timidly suggesting a chicken sandwich and a glass of milk to the waitress in the studio commissary, "is not yet over. For when we disappeared from that house we turned up, somehow or other, in an apartment in the Normandy Village here in Hollywood.

"For days and weeks we did without a servant and it got to lookin' like something. Then, just as things were getting all out of control and the cupboard was bare and this little dog had none I awoke one morning to hear strange stirrings in the kitchen regions. Maybe it was a burglar, I thought. But it was too early to get up and see. So I went to sleep again and hours later I awoke and wandered out to the kitchen and there was Ellen! Ellen, without benefit of employment agency or anything. Ellen, and miracles had hap-pened while I slept. The mounds of ashes which had given the place the look of Vesuvius after an eruption had disor Vesuvus after an eruption had disappeared.

"Now how, I wondered, had she managed that? The sink no longer resembled a china rummage sale. Yep, Ellen was there, big and black and competent. She worked, we learned, for the Normandy Village, part time for each tennant. We took Ellen right away from the Normandy Village. And for a time there were practically no inconveniences. tically no inconveniences.

BUT all too soon it developed that Ellen was a tap dancer. And it soon further developed that Ellen's art was more to her than the combined stomachs of Stewart, Swope & Logan. She really didn't care about us compared to doing a dusky version of Fred Astaire or Eleanor Powell. And so one night Ellen went forth to her dancing lesson and just never came back. We thought of suing her for desertion but the best legal advice assured us that there is no such thing.

"Yeah," said Jimmy, tugging at his collar-length hair, "yeah, the inconveniences of being a bachelor are something like the inconveniences of married life, I bet. It's seldom the colorful, dramatic things that cause the ructions and the Reno-vatings.

"Some of the inconveniences are, really, more than just inconveniences. Some of em give you a kind of an ache of missing things, of time passing and cheating as it passes. For instance, I want a home. want a home of my own and want it badly. I want to build me a house, design it, be my own architect.

"I studied architecture at Princeton, you know, with the intention of expressing myself in steel girders. So I want to put it self in steel girders. So I want to put it to some use. I want to have my own furniture. I want to have my own furniture. I want to have my own pown hatrack. I want to have my own garden and books and things. I'd like the feeling of walking on solid earth and being able to say 'this is mine.'

"I'm a possessive cuss, at heart. But as a bachelor, I don't dare to strike roots. I might build me a Georgian mansion and turn around and marry a girl who wouldn't be happy in anything but a Mediterranean type villa. The result is, I don't build. I don't settle down. I don't have anything permanent or satisfying or mine own.

"So I guess," drawled Jimmy, grinning above his pain, "that it's not the girls you take to the Troc and all who cause a bachelor his inconveniences. It's the Daisys of the world and what they do to us. I of the world and what they do to us. guess when you ask me about the inconveniences of being a bachelor I should just sigh and roll up my eyes and say, 'My dear, this servant problem, it will be the death of me!"

which of these styles are most suitable for her type and position, and decides just what she is going to buy to make her ensemble as perfect as possible. For one of her best sources of inspiration she goes to the movies and studies the styles worn by the stars, because she knows that all the ingenuity of the most talented designers has gone into the creating of these clothes which will be an important influence in future fashions worn the country over.

Andrea Leeds, as the leading feminine heart-interest in "The Goldwyn Follies," the little lady who makes good, is a typical American girl and is dressed accordingly, in good-looking, practical clothes that really are wearable and within the reach of the not-so-large clothes allowance.

ANDREA'S dark daytime dress with its refreshing touches of white at the neck and cuffs is the type of frock that is recommended to the city girl, to the girl who works in an office or store. Because the fabric is dark and simply woven, particular attention has been given to the lines and draping, which are especially suited to a beautiful, youthful figure like Andrea's. The skirt hangs straight and is slightly gathered by the soft pleats in the front. The treatment of waistline and bodice is interesting, the midriff being snugly fitted, while the top of the dress looks almost like a little bust-length jacket, buttoning with four small buttons.

The crisp white collar with its perky bow and the white cuffs on the set-in puffed sleeves give that freshly-tubbed look that is so essential to a well-groomed appearance. The ensemble is completed with accessories consisting of calf pumps trimmed with little leather bows, calf purse, doeskin gloves. Andrea's off-the-face bonnet gives her a very wide-eyed look, don't you think?

You young things who love to dance, and who go to lots of parties, will find them even more enjoyable if you look for a frock like Andrea's charmingly shaded pastel triple sheer, worn over a rustling taffeta slip. The huge "pouff" sleeves are an attractive feature, as is the wide skirt whose hemline is made to stand out bell-like with a two-toned banding of heavy corded silk ribbon. The white collar is of the same material as this band. A narrow sash from the sides ties in a tiny bow in back. The tightly-fitting waist is closed at the back with a row of small buttons leading up to the modest slit, which reaches to the neckline. Springtime is Prom time, and the gay young "prom trotter" will find a light dance frock like this invaluable ing up to the modest slit, which reaches to the neckline. Springtime is Prom time, and the gay young "prom trotter" will find a light dance frock like this invaluable.

Another of Andrea Leeds' costumes which I hope you will notice particularly is her two-piece wool suit. The straight pencil line is the most popular for suits of all types this spring. Andrea's skirt is slim and straight, as is her full-length coat. Smart details of this season are seen in the huge patch pockets, the straight sleeves, slightly puffed shoulders and the extra-wide high notched lapels of the coat. She seems to like off-the-face hats, for this one too is a simple up-in-the-front downin-the-back model. You'll get lots of wear out of a two-piece suit like this one, with a long or three-quarter coat that can be worn over your spring prints as well. You can wear a soft silk blouse with it, as Andrea does, or one of your sweaters for spectator sports occasions.

SUITS have always held an important place in spring fashions, and this year they're being given more attention than ever before. In fact, a suit is practically a "must" for your spring wardrobe. With your tailored suit, I would suggest

With your tailored suit, I would suggest that you wear a low-heeled style of shoe, such as the one Rosemary Lane has chosen for her personal wardrobe. These tan calf high-front sandals with the new punch trim on the vamps are practical as well as smart, comfortable to walk in, and easy to look at. Your spring prints, on the other hand, call for a "dressier" shoe, something like the blue gabardine pumps shown above that Rosemary's sister, Priscilla, selected. These have a higher heel, but are equally as comfortable as Rosemary's sandals. The dotted patent leather trim is a smart spring detail. If you would like to have the very same shoes worn my Rosemary and Priscilla Lane to wear with your tailored suit and spring prints, just write to me for the name of the nearest store that carries them, for both these styles are sold throughout the country. A penny postcard addressed to Ann Wills, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Avenue, New York City, will bring you a speedy answer.

Marriage Expensive

There's one man in Hollywood who doesn't believe that a gal can mix marriage and career successfully. It's Harold Lloyd who's put Phyllis Welch—his new leading lady—under a contract that stipulates she'll lose $6,000 if she marries or becomes engaged within the next six months. And Harold's the one real authority on the subject-for proof look at his own marriage with his former leading lady who gave up all thoughts of the screen when she said her I Franciska Gaal, who made such an auspicious debut in "The Buccaneer," arrived in Hollywood from Budapest without a word of English to her credit. The studio hired an English tutor for the actress immediately, and after three weeks of study with him, Franciska was called for a conference at the studio to talk over her forthcoming role. She understood hardly a word spoken to her, until a producer asked her in Hungarian if there was something wrong with her tutor. "Not a thing!" Franciska assured him in her native tongue, "Only only we liked each other so much, and had so much to talk about, that—well, he learned Hungarian."

His Knee Was Sharp

Making movies is really an unromantic business-as was evidenced on the "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" set. For a scene, Claudette Colbert had to sit on Gary Cooper's knee. And this she did for almost five hours before the director was satisfied with the Claudette didn't mind for she was comfortable-after the first hour. At that time she excused herself, and returned carrying a small pillow. "Hope you don't mind, Gary," she smiled, "but the knees are a bit sharp." "Perfectly all right," said Gary agreeably, settling the pillow and Claudette again on his knee, "you're a bit on the sharp side yourself."

Want to know who's boss around the Claudette Colbert-Joel Pressman menage? It's the doctor who rules with an iron hand, and here's the proof: When the two of them left for Europe recently, Claudette wanted to take her dog, Smoky, along as far as New York. The doctor said no, and Smoky stayed home, probably thinking bitterly of the good old days, when Claudette was single and a soft touch for a dog with nice manners and a way about

You Never Can Tell

Two examples of the unpredictable ways of children, even in Hollywood: The Bing Crosbys, expecting a girl, had the nursery entirely done over in pink. You know what happened. George Burns and Gracie Allen spent a week selecting expensive toys to make young Ronnie's Christmas a happy one. After Ronnie had opened them all, the item he liked best was a piece of red cellophane wrapping.

To be different, Madcap Mabel Todd of "Hollywood Hotel" chews chains instead of nails when she's in a quandary.

"Take a memo, Mabel" brings out that Todd industry and determination. Watch out or that pencil lead will snap!

Mabel is a study in concentration as she puts her all into her knitting. She never drops a stitch. We believe it!

During John Barrymore's recent hegira in New York, he submitted to a caricaturist in Sardi's. When the sketch was finished and handed to Barrymore for his signature, he refused to sign until the artist removed what he considered exaggerated jowls. The artist erased the jowls, Barrymore signed and left. The artist, an unscrupulous gent, immediately replaced the jowls.

Freddie Bartholomew is a practical young man. On the "Kidnapped" set, a scene ca'led for him to approach Warner Baxter and announce, "I am David Balfour." Freddie removed the brace from his lowers and stepped before the camera. "What about that brace on your uppers?" asked the director. "When I say 'I am David Balfour'," explained young Mr. B., "I don't move my upper lip."

No Place Like Home

Robert Taylor now has his San Fernando ranch-house completely finished and furnished. "With the maximum of comfort and the minimum of style," to quote Mr. T. And that's*just about the truth. For there are just four rooms in all—and all full of furniture which has been specially built in over-sizes. The result is hardly artistic, but it's home to Bob.

Wallace Beery and his wife and Carol Ann are setting off any day now for that flying trip through Europe. He wan't take his own plane, though. He'll rent planes over there. Carol Ann isn't in the least enthused about the trip. Since playing that bit—that very small bit—in "Bad Man of Brimstone" she is convinced that leaving Hollywood at this time is sheer folly.

That's Vengeance!

A year ago Helen Broderick tried to peddle her son, Broderick Crawford, to RKO for $250 a week, but the studio turned him down. Now a hit on Broadway in "Of Mice and Men," Crawford will probably receive flattering film offers when the play closes, but mama has made him promise he won't sign with RKO. If no one else offers him a job, Miss B., insists she'll pay him $250 a week herself.

Now that Bill Powell has finished "The Baroness and the Butler" with Annabella, he is seldom seen around the town's night spots—or even around the town. Once one of the gayest of the local cavaliers, he now plans to spend most of his time between pictures out of the city. He can stand Hollywood without Jean Harlow—just so long at a time.

She Got Sympathy

During the recent trial over the custody of her adopted son, Barbara Stanwyck suffered some humiliation, but she certainly lost no prestige. Frank Fay, many believe, used the trial for publicity purposes. Since the trial, Miss Stanwyck has received over 7,000 letters commending her for the honesty and sincerity she displayed during the unfortunate ordeal.

Carole Lombard's gambling instincts went wild the other day and she let herself go to the extent of taking a chance on one of those "name" punchboards. The name Carole punched was Pansy. And we regret to report that Pansy didn't do a thing for her sponsor.

He Wants Dough

The most determined riding Gene Autry ever did happened the day he rode out of Republic studio and threatened to keep riding until his contract was adjusted. Gene makes six pictures a year, and receives approximately $6,000 per picture. Considering the fact that he's Number One Cowboy these days, Autry feels the studio should share a bit more of the profits. Winning the finest gal in all the West six times a year is all right, but a guy has to be able to support her.

And So Goodbye

About to leave for New York recently, Elizabeth Patterson dropped into the office of a Paramount executive to say goodbye. "But," said the guy, "you can't leave. There's a picture listed for you on the schedule sheet." Elizabeth doubted it, so he handed her the sheet for inspection. What it said was: Elizabeth Patterson—LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Retakes on "Having Wonderful Time," the Ginger Rogers-Doug Fairbanks, Jr., picture, were ordered because producers felt that Boy didn't meet Girl soon enough. So Ginger and Doug slapped on the greasepaint and went back to meet each other again—but sooner. Which reminds us of a standing rule for scenarists at Columbia studios. Boy must meet Girl by page 22. or the script is tossed out.

Highbrow Reading

At a newsstand on Hollywood Boulevard, a dignified and very British looking gentleman in tweeds and monocle thumbs through the racy picture magazines, puts them back on their piles and buys a pulp detective magazine. Reason this is reported is that the tweedy gentleman was George Arliss.

Lady in Distress

While Doug, Sr., and his wife were away, Doug, Jr., lived in their house at Santa Monica beach. It's next door to Norma Shearer's home. Of course they knew each other, but imagine Doug's surprise to be wakened one morning about one o'clock by his butler. "Miss Shearer's at the door. Wants to see you right away." Seems that Norma had come home, opened the front door and found the hall flooded with almost a foot of water. Being a girl of ingenuity, Norma picked up, her long party dress skirts, knotted them around her waist, and climbed over the fence to her neighbor's yard. There she called the plumber who had the burst pipe all fixed up, the hall drained out and everything in apple-pie order before the Shearer servants or children had a chance to be alarmed.

Just a Doodler

Monumental news from a studio press release: "Fanciest doodler in Hollywood is Fred MacMurray, star of 'Cocoanut Grove.' The actor took a course in show card writing once, and therefore doodles by making neatly formed block letters instead of the aimless curly-cues scrawled by most people." Let that be a lesson to all of us. Aimless doodling must go!

time of their lives. For all during the picture, there have been parties given by directors, producers and actors for the girls. Elizabeth Risdon finished up the picture with a dinner-party at a big hotel. There was fried chicken, and not a fork in sight. But that wasn't the best thing about the dinner—it was that Arthur Treacher donned his best butling outfit and manners and served them in the height of celluloid style. And if you know anything at all about butlers, celluloid or otherwise, you know that Mr. Treacher is the absolute tops! Needless to say, he was one of the most popular guests present.

Secret's Out

Marjorie Weaver, who caused a flurry in "Second Honeymoon", caused another one when she denied having stolen off to Indiana to become the bride of a naval lieutenant. However, the Indiana records prove she is now Mrs. Kenneth Schacht (pronounced Shock). But the most interesting angle of the thing is that Marjorie flew East on a pass obtained for her by a local gentleman friend, to whom the secret wedding was, to put it mildly, something of a Shock (pronounced Schacht.)

When Franchot Tone arrived back in Hollywood after spending the greater part of his vacation in New York without the Little Woman, none other than Joan herself met him at the train, thus spiking those rumors of a separation that flew all over the place while he's been away. Whether or not it's all sweetness and light with Mr. and Mrs. Tone, they always manage to act pretty for their public.

Chip on His Shoulder

Bing Crosby's eldest son, Gary, has very definite ideas as to his attitude toward the new baby. When the youngest member of the clan was brought home from the hospital, Bing wanted to know what Gary thought of him. "I'll tell you one thing," Gary declared in no uncertain terms, "I'm going to be meaner to this guy than I was to the twins." It seems young Gary had his heart all set on a baby sister and he's that put out about it all.

The night of the "Goldwyn Follies" preview brought out everybody in Hollywood, it would seem. In fact, the lobby of the theatre was almost as star-studded as though it were an opening night. Andrea Leeds and Edgar Bergen arrived together with Charlie McCarthy sitting between them in the front seat of a baby Austin. Alfred Vanderbilt and Margaret Lindsay and Loretta Young and Jock Whitney made up a foresome while Jon Hall escorted Gertrude Niesen. Rudy Vallee made his entrance via the back door while Gloria Youngblood went in the front, but it was all right because they got together inside. They still seem to prefer each other.

get has to do with bust'r trouble. "How can I develop, firm or otherwise improve my frontal contours?" That's a pet question, and just about the hardest one to answer honestly. For, truthfully speaking, you cannot regain the contours of Venus or who-have-you when the muscles have started to sag. You can improve matters and here is an exercise which is swell, backed up with a good uplift bra. If you have bozzom trouble, do not, I beg of you, wear the all-in-one type of foundation. No matter how excellently cut in other respects, there is a slight downward pull. Wear a girdle and separate bra. But the exercise—the exercise:

Sit on a backless chair or stool. Take

Sit on a backless chair or stool. Take a stick in your hands, Hands should be a little more than shoulder width apart. Rest the stick across your knees to start. Now bring the stick up over your head, arms straight, and at the same time, bring your legs up to right angle position with your body, knees stiff. Do it slowly. Now, legs still at right angle position, bring the stick down behind your head until it rests on your shoulders. Take two great big deep breaths in this position, and return to the start. The arm business is easy, but you must feel the pull in the chest muscles. The leg business is just to make things harder—to encourage proper balance and posture of the whole body, in other words.

harder—to encourage proper balance and posture of the whole body, in other words. Enough about the body beautiful for now. You know, if you work at it, you can have a figure as lovely as Jean Parker's and that's the tops! Here are some tips on types of hair, too.

Have you decided as so many are doing.

Have you decided, as so many are doing, to let your hair grow? And is it just about getting you down, so that you think you'll go and have it whacked off again? Perhaps this notion may make life easier while you're making up your mind. If your hair is thick, and getting longish, and awfully hard to do up on curlers and things, get a hunk of electrician's wire. It's sturdy, but nice and pliable. That's something of a contradiction in terms, ain't it, but you know what I mean. Use it to make that neat roll at the back which, in spite of what is said about hair going up, is still a practical solution of the hair problem for every day. You can spread the hair out more across the back of the head with this beauty aid purloined from the hardware store. You can use it, too, to make a soft roll curl.

I know a girl who brushes the daylights

I know a girl who brushes the daylights out of her medium-brown hair every day, wears it parted in the middle and absolutely straight on top—and does it shine, with all that brushing—and she has this single roll curl slanting from a just-below-the-ear length at the sides to that little bone which you can find at the base of your neck.

Nobody seems ever to pay any attention to the girl with the too-curly hair—the kind that is next door to frizzy. I asked a good hairdresser about this problem, and he asked had I ever heard of the de-permanenting machine? Seems this will straighten hair some. I asked was it efficient and practical and he said, "We-e-ell, you have to keep right after it all the time and have professional hair sets once a week." Ennyhoo, I pass the information along if there is anybody in the audience who would be interested.

Miriam Hopkins, y'know, has exceedingly curly hair, though not frizzy, and in her latest picture, she had to wear an almost straight hairdo. Just a little soft curl on the ends was all the script allowed her. They gently brushed quite a lot of brilliantine into her hair, then ironed it down, also gently, with a stone cold curling iron, turning up the ends just the slightest bit. Another solution of the too-curly hair problem is to saturate it with plenty of waveset, push in waterwave combs at strategic points—very wide apart—and to let the combs stay in until the hair is absolutely dry, and then not to comb the hair out at all. The ends of the hair look well turned into soft ringlets, or, better still, cut rather short, and swirled to one side or the other.

This type of hair, too, will go up on top of the bean easily, since its tight curl gives it so much body and staying power. But if you decide on this type of coiffure, take your troubles to a professional hair-dresser, have him or her cut and set your hair in a definite hairdo and return for a professional set every ten days.

Speaking of cold curling irons, two handsome Hollywood blondes swear by this method of hair-beautifying—Carole Lombard and Madeleine Carroll. When Carole wants a rather definite curl, she uses a warm—not a hot iron. For the familiar Lombard bob, she uses the cold iron. Madeleine has a set every now and then, and keeps it looking nice by going over it with the cold iron.

ONE of our most delightful newcomers and seekers after stardom is Andrea Leeds. It was while she was doing a brief bit in "Come And Get It" some months ago that I met her, and I couldn't help noticing her eyelashes. "What, no false fringe?" I asked. She was as pleased as punch with the implied compliment, and said that when she was in her early teens, her lashes were thick enough, but so short they were completely lacking in glamor and she began putting dark eyelash grower on them, every single night of her life. She's still doing it, and the Leeds blinkers are unbelievably silky. The stimulation of creamy eyelash grower, as I've said time and again, will make lashes look more luxuriant than they are.

What else did I want to tell you about?

Oh, yes. Have you ever noticed Luise Rainer's mouth? And Bette Davis' mouth? Both ladies' rosy lips are rounded at the corners. I was thinking, if you were dissatisfied with the shape of your mouche, and can't successfully improve it by the fashionable method of widening it at the bow, howz about getting a small artist's paint brush and practicing on the corners. You need a soft paste rouge to do this. Or you can scoop a hunk of your favorite lipstick out of its socket, for an experiment, and mix it up with a little tissue cream or vaseline. Be pretty sure of your-cream or vaseline. Be pretty sure of yourself before you barge out into the the waiting world with this innovation.

Do your ears stick out? Do you know what the male movie actors do, who are similarly affected—all except Mr. Gable, who just doesn't give a damn. They tape them back with adhesive tape.

Have you a slide-away chin? Put rouge right on the point of it, blending it in, of course.

Are you troubled with mean little hairs on your face, where the skin is too tender to use a dipilatory? Try bleaching them with a solution of peroxide and household ammonia. Use one part ammonia to ten parts peroxide, gradually increasing the strength until you have equal parts of each strength until you have equal parts of each ingredient. When the hairs are pretty much bleached and dry, rub the spot gently with a pumice stone. Gradually, the peroxide and ammonia will weaken the annoying hairs and the rubbing with the pumice will break the hairs off, and pretty soon you'll only have to do a little dabbing with peroxide now and then to cope with this troublesome problem.

If the skin becomes irritated while the of days, and apply a nourishing cream to the spots. No, Annabella—cream does not stimulate the growth of hair on the face. If it did, why wouldn't all the baldheaded men be using it, huh? The above home-made depillating process, by the way, isn't good for arms or legs. Use a regular depilatory there.

DO you want to add at least sixty percent to your charm and sex appeal? Then use perfume in the right way. I know I know, you can't afford the best, so you'll not have any. But have you paid a visit to the perfume counter of your local five-and-dime recently? Have yuh local five-and-dime recently? Have yuh seen the tiny little vials of very expensive perfume done up for ten cents? Only a drop or two of the precious fluid is contained in these vials, but that's all you need. Put it on furs whenever possible. On the lining of your best hat. On two thicknesses of flannel, sewn together, and sew the flannel to your dress.

Buy, also, the small flacons of toilet water. Find out about that scented paste which one rubs into the lining of bureau drawers. This is more expensive, but the scent lasts a whole year, on my honor, and smells up the lingerie, hankies, gloves and everything too booful for words. Take an atomizer and spritz perfume on your hair. Put it at the base of your neck, be-hind your ears, and on the palms of your hands if you can afford to put it where it must soon be scrubbed off. But don't put it on handkerchiefs or directly on your dresses-that ain't the way.

WHAT HAVE THEY—THAT YOU HAVEN'T?

knows enough to make the most of her opportunities. Going to schools in Mar-seilles, Madagascar, Budapest and Berlin, topped off with a session at art school in Paris gave the little Simone rare opportunities to observe people. She is always watching, making sly sketches of people that show how deftly she can indicate character in the turn of a head, the clutch of a hand.

The chief advantage of study for a screen star, Carole Lombard told me long screen star, Carole Lombard to concentrate. ago, is that it teaches you to concentrate. Carole's formal education was a bit sketchy, but during that pain-wracked year when she was bedridden following an automobile accident, Carole read the sonnets and plays of Shakespeare. She read nets and plays of Shakespeare. She read them with such intentness that without realizing what she was doing, she memorized long passages. So great was her concentration that she forgot her pain. Her roles nowadays are a far cry from the classics, but the concentration comes in handy. You can't let your mind wander when you are in front of the camera.

Let's assume that you have the grit and

Let's assume that you have the grit and determination and curiosity to make you study all the time. What else do you need? Well, how are you on bounce? When Fate kicks you around, delivering one staggering blow after another to your pride, do you cringe and expect defeat, or do you live up to that Astaire gem that counselled "Pick yourself up, dust yourself off, and start all over again?"

IF ANY girl ever got ahead in pictures without heartbreaking disappointments, I never heard of her. Most girls you idolize are like rubber balls. The harder they are thrown down, the higher they bounce.

"But actresses must be sensitive," I can hear you saying.

Quite right. They must be responsive in order to project emotions, but they cannot allow themselves the extravagance of a trace of self pity. It isn't the emotions you feel, but what you can make others feel that make you a skilled actress. The fact that you cried all night after an old friend snubbed you, does not mean that you have the makings of a tragedy queen. When Bette Davis was thrown over by her first love, she settled down to work harder than ever. But often in pictures, by a mere shrug of her shoulders she has made you feel the impact of frustration, defeat.

How truthful are you to yourself? How about that double-rich chocolate malted you sneaked yesterday after your dieter's lunch of green salad and tea? And how about those towering-heeled pumps, a size too small, that you bought because they made your feet look cute? And as long as we're being mean about it, how about that habit of swinging your foot that you have always meant to stop, but just haven't?

The motion picture camera never goes in for day dreams. It tells the brutal truth. All your resolutions to carry out the beauty regime so wisely advised by Mary Marshall, all your determination to shed nervous habits, to have a more radiant and interested outlook on life wouldn't show on the screen. Only what you have accomplished can be caught by the camera.

Can you take criticism, or does it crush

Perhaps the toughest problem our screen favorites have solved for themselves is how to remain sensitive to constructive criticism and yet be unaffected by malicious attacks. If Rosalind Russell had taken it to heart when directors said that they would rather direct any instinctively-emotional little gutter-snipe than a blueblooded clam, she would not be in pictures today. Instead of shrinking from the directors who found her too coolly intelligent, she just gave them every chance to see how vivacious, how spirited she really is.

Simone Simon probably wished that she had never learned to understand English when the hammer-throwing brigade con-centrated on her. Everyone granted that she was cunning as can be, a childish face with a Circe's seductiveness, but see her once and you have seen all, they insisted. Simone did not discard the provocative pout that is practically her trade-mark, but she is concentrating on study of a wide range of roles, comic and tragic, and on developing her singing voice. Say what you will about her today, she is deter-mined to impress you by her versatility tomorrow.

Because Virginia Bruce has the most beautifully-serene manner, and Carole Lombard was always so happy-go-lucky, they had "Just a dumb blonde" hurled at them from all sides. And Bette Davis, incredible as it may seem, was criticized for being limp and colorless.

Somewhere, tucked away in the most caustic criticism by people jealous of you, there may be a grain of truth. Look for it, don't just get riled and think up a crack to hurl back at them. The girls who get ahead in pictures are the ones who have learned to confound their critics by saying, "If what you say is true, perhaps you can suggest something that I can do to get over it.

If I haven't asked too much of you already, how is your confidence? I don't mean conceit, which is no more like confidence than tinsel is like silver, I mean assurance that makes it possible for you to ask for opportunities with the knowledge that you have done everything to train yourself to make the most of them. I am asking if you have convictions about yourself that are so strong that nothing that could happen to you could alter them. How would you feel at the end of a year like Bette Davis' first in Hollywood? Could you keep going confidently after all the producers at Universal said you could act but were a colorless little wren that no one would ever notice? Could you, like Carole Lombard, slam your hat rakishly on your head, say, "Never let it be said that Lombard was a bad loser," and go off to another studio bright as paint when a producer told you he was afraid to risk you in a leading role?

Maybe you could stand all that, and if you can I am proud of you, but how is your patience? After you had played a scene, getting the feel of it just right, and knowing that you could never feel so inspired again, could you repeat it ten—twenty—fifty times, one right after an-

I promised you a game of truth a while ago, and now is a good time to play it. Get five or six other attractive girls to play it with you and promise me that you will be absolutely ruthless with yourself and them. You would have to take ruthlessness in Hollywood, not from selected friends, but from strange producers, directors, costumers, make-up experts, newspaper critics and candid cameramen. Players don't live in a goldfish bowl in Hollywood. They live under a magnifying glass.

wood. They live under a magnifying glass.

Now for our truth game. Write the names of the actresses I have been telling you about down on slips of paper, and in another column write your name and those of your fellow players. Allowing yourself only a minute or so, write down the word that immediately occurs to you the word that immediately occurs to you as you glance at each name.

Here is the result from a playwright I just sprang it on, Rosalind Russell, pedigree; Virginia Bruce, compassion; Simone Simon, cunning; Bette Davis, gusto; Carole Lombard, sportsmanship. All very definite qualities, aren't they? Next I gave him the names of five young girls we know who are trying to get on the stage or in pictures and he wrote down, "Brittle, shy, vague, dissatisfied, and rebellious." Those girls have a lot of work to do on themselves, haven't they?

But suppose that you are a girl who makes a knockout impression the minute people meet you. Suppose you are the good little girl who eats her spinach and does her lessons, doesn't let failure get her down and looks herself straight in the mirror. Suppose you have endless determination, too, and you still aren't up with Bette and Rosalind and Simone in the marquee lights. And you aren't even doing too well on dates, to be candid about it.

Did anyone ever tell you that you are just like any of these girls we have been talking about—or like Janet Gaynor or Myrna Loy or any other favorite?

There's your answer.

SCHOOL-AGE PIMPLES?

Thousands of young people have said good-by to the curse of youth-a pimply skin. They know what happens between the ages of 13 and 25, the time of life when important glands develop. Your system is upset. Poisons may pollute your blood stream and bubble out on your skin in ugly pimples. Then you need to cleanse and purify your blood.

Let Fleischmann's Yeast help remove these impurities the natural way. Millions of tiny, active, living yeast plants will help keep poisons from the blood and help to heal your broken-out skin. Many report amazing results in 30 days or less. Start eating Fleischmann's Yeast now. Buy some tomorrow!

HOW TO BE RUDE POLITFLY

the train. If we missed it, there wasn't another along for an hour. It finally reached such fantastic proportions that we might have been seen by anyone who cared to look, and some did, skithering down the main street, hats and shoes and neckties draped over our arms. We always made it, though sometimes by a single finger, and would dangle from the car-step, thumbing our noses at the clock and feeling years. ing our noses at the clock and feeling very pleased with ourselves.

"But that's being rudely rude, isn't it?
However, I doubt if the clock minded. A However, I doubt if the clock minded. A clock, the one thing I should like to insult, seems singularly insensitive to insult, seems singularly insensitive to insult. Where was I? At my morning grouch, I believe. Well, it begins when Theodore, the butler, calls me and says: 'It's seven o'clock, Mr. Powell.' Here we have a strange interlude. 'Shut up,' says my inner self. 'Never speak to me again. You're fired,' says my inner self. 'Chirp, chirp, tweet, tweet,' says my mouth, and I hang up. "Then he pops in with the orange juice, all beaming and bright. Which in itself constitutes a grievance. 'What's he looking so cheerful about?'

"En route to the studio, I work up a fine new series of hates. For traffic signals, for pedestrians who insist on crossing the street, for other cars that presume to use the public highways. I scorch them with silent vitriol, which so relieves me that I am able to pause respectfully at traffic lights, to beam at pedestrians, to slink from the path of every horn that honks.

"And so I arrive. The gateman who is required to check me in says: 'Good morning, Mr. Powell,' which is fine, makes me feel he likes me, we're friends, fellowworkers, comrades and all that, two poor dubs who have to get up in the morning. I love that gateman, till he looks at the clock. Then my brotherly sentiments melt clock. Then my brotherly sentiments melt away. He becomes an enemy. I'm morally certain he's giving me none the best of it. I resent his audacity in looking at the certain he's giving me none the best of it. I resent his audacity in looking at the clock at all. My impulse is to pop him one on the nose. I smother that impulse, look at the clock myself, and ask him the time. Inwardly I'm saying: 'Dare to cheat me by so much as a second, you so-and-so.' If it's six to nine and he calls out five to nine, I say thank you and depart, hurling silent by so finite as a second, you so-anit-so. It it's six to nine and he calls out five to nine, I say thank you and depart, hurling silent anathema. If it's four to nine and he calls out five to nine, I say thank you and depart in adoration. I reach the set, ready to outglare any glarers, discover that no one pays the least attention to me, that, in fact, I'm on time. A mantle of peace descends. My bout of morning rudeness is concluded."

"What about afternoon and evening rudeness?" "I'm giving a practical demonstration now," he replied, slightly craning his neck from which he had just removed his stiff collar. "It's manners out of joint to remove your collar in the presence of a lady. Yet I am one who chafes at bonds. Both my soul and my throat crave freedom. Hence, I take you into my confidence. I disarm you with frankness. I implore you to understand that this is no affront to etiquette, but a passion for wide-open spaces. I say, in effect: 'With collar, I interview badly. Without, I'm not so hot,' no pun intended, but I manage. I attempt to take the curse from rudeness by offering cosiness instead. Let's take down our back hair, that's the general idea. I can bare my heart better when my neck is bare."

heart better when my neck is bare."

I inquired as to his procedure with autograph hunters. "Now that's really a problem," he said, "and I mean it seriously. I'm genuinely grateful to people who are good enough to like me. Only a pig wouldn't be. But there is also the instinct for self-preservation, not to mention the preservation of one's outer garments. When they come singly, I can handle them. When they come in numbers, I surrender the reins to a better man than I am, usually a member of our glorious publicity departa member of our glorious publicity department, and let him take the rap.

"And that reminds me. We may as well get the topic of interviews off our chests. I'm sometimes asked to give them at lunch-time. I'm rude enough to refuse. And here we have another method of being rude here we have another method of being rude politely—what is known as the transfer method. I don't enjoy giving interviews at lunchtime. They'll tell you round here that I sleep my lunchtime away. That's a canard. I use the time to gird up on my lines, excuse it, please, for the afternoon. But I can hardly use that as an excuse not to lunch with the press. I'd be told to gird up my lines the night before.

"Therefore I persuade you, I say to you

"Therefore I persuade you, I say to you for the sake of euphony, dear, dear, there for the sake of euphony, dear, dear, there I go again, you'd probably rather starve than have lunch with me. I persuade you then, the generic you, that you don't enjoy getting interviews at lunchtime, thus removing the onus from my shoulders to yours, and getting the reputation for being a good fellow at the same time.

"Then there's another interview problem to cope with. I am sometimes asked to discourse on such topics as how I enjoy being a midget, what it feels like to weigh four hundred pounds, thoughts of a man of twenty and so on. Now it happens that I've never been a midget, never weighed

I've never been a midget, never weighed more than three hundred, and it's a year or two since I passed the age of twenty.

"Now I might of course simply mention these facts and bow my visitor out with what grace I could muster. That would be the logical course. It would also be the logical representation of the course of t the obviously rude one. I've engaged to spend an hour or two with the interviewer.

spend an hour or two with the interviewer. I feel I owe him that hour. So when he asks me how I enjoy being a midget, I lean back, become brightly animated and say: 'How do you?'

"This may lead anywhere on up to giants, on down to fleas or on out to the lunatic asylum. It once led to a brisk and absorbing discussion on how it would feel to be a midget, twenty years old and to be a midget, twenty years old and weighing four hundred pounds. The point isn't where it leads, only that it should lead somewhere, to avoid the somewhat embarrassing alternative of having two people sit facing each other silently in a small room for an hour, at the end of which time they would rise, shake hands, to indicate there was no hard feeling, and separate.

"Possibilities there. You'd open a magazine and instead of seeing printed words, there would be a picture of me on one side, the interviewer on the other, both fish-eyed, and a lot of white space between. How's that for an angle? No? One can only offer his best. That's what I try to do. The man may come in for a midget do. The man may come in for a midget story and depart with one on the high cost of kilowatts. That doesn't matter. The point is he's got a story. He's happy. I'm happy. The studio's happy. And the goose hangs high.

"By the way, have you got a story?"

dog, they kick him. And they're right!"
All those who knew Bette Davis before she climbed to fame agree that the underlying keynotes of her character were her determination to become an actress and her shyness. It is difficult for those who know Bette today to grasp the fact that she was painfully self-conscious, but it is true.

SHE first got the idea of going on the stage when she played the lead in one of the school plays at Cushing Academy. The principal of the school congratulated her, saying, "I hope, my dear, you will have thick of tolking up actions as a career." never think of taking up acting as a career.

That gave her the idea of doing just that. At first she took dancing lessons with Roshanara, but Frank Conroy encouraged her to give up dancing and try to get dramatic roles. Realizing that it would be a wonderful thing for her if she could be a sesociated with Fig. 16. Gallieppe even in associated with Eva Le Gallienne even in unimportant roles, Bette went to Miss Le Gallienne and begged to be given a chance to play in the Civic Repertory Theatre. But she was so wretchedly nervous that when Miss Le Gallienne asked her to read some lines, she acquitted herself very badly.

It was then that Bette's mother, who believes that people ought to be allowed to believes that people ought to be allowed to follow the work they want to do in the world instead of being forced into conformity, suggested to Bette that she attend John Murray Anderson's dramatic school in New York. Though Mr. Anderson agreed to take her on as a student, she impressed those who met her at the time as very timid. "She was like something the rain had whipped," one man who knew her at the time said. her at the time said.

While she was attending dramatic school, James Light of the Provincetown Players, directed a school play, "The Famous Mrs. Fair." He liked Bette's work so much that he gave her a small part in a play the Provincetown Players were producing.

No one who met Bette today could possibly forget her. But in those days, it was altogether different.

"She was such a charming girl," Blanche Yurka told me, during a lull at a rehearsal for a play. One of Bette Davis' early roles on the stage was with Blanche Yurka's company.

"You know," Miss Yurka said, "in those days she was just an ingenue. The part she played in 'The Wild Duck,' was that of Usalvia a wide-eyed innocent young played in 'The Wild Duck,' was that of Hedwig, a wide-eyed innocent young woman. Bette seemed eminently suited to the part. She had such a soft face. I never dreamed in those days that she would play such roles as that of Mildred in 'Of Human Bondage' or the girl in 'Dangerous' or any of the vicious women she has since created on the screen. I never watch her that I do not marvel that the very quiet, subdued girl I knew can play such roles."

Oscar Serlin was one of the few people who saw the stamp of greatness on Bette. One day he saw her playing at the Province-town Playhouse in "The Earth Between," a bitter, tempestuous drama of a farmer's a bitter, tempestuous drama or a tarmer's unnatural love for his own daughter and the unholy means he took to keep the man who loved her away from her. With quiet conviction, Bette played the daughter.

And because Serlin had an unerring instinct for what makes greatness in the theatre, he decided that one day he would make use of her ability.

His chance came soon, when he decided to produce "Broken Dishes" in New York. Bette was very humble and very grateful for this grand chance. But when she began to rehearse the role, she sensed an air of tension in the atmosphere. It didn't take her long to guess what caused it. Though Mr. Serlin believed in her, there were other people associated with him in the production of this play who did not like to stake the play's success on a player who had had so little experience as Bette. One day Bette learned that she might lose the role.

"Her reaction? It was a typical feminine reaction. She burst into tears," Mr. Serlin said, chuckling mildly.

For in those days Bette hadn't developed that elaborate defense mechanism.

"Don't worry, Bette," Serlin told her.
"Everything will turn out all right."

And whenever his associates suggested getting someone else for the role, he told them that he was certain Bette could play the part. She was excellent!

To Serlin she said, "I'll never forget what you've done for me." And she hasn't. One of the things that distinguishes Bette from the Margaret Sullavans and the

One of the things that distinguishes bette from the Margaret Sullavans and the Katharine Hepburns of Hollywood is the simple, honest quality of her gratitude. I was present once at a party which Bette attended in New York, where she greeted several press agents from the different companies. Each of them was anxious to remind her of how much his studio had done for her. In her warm, enthusiastic done for her. In her warm, enthusiastic voice, she said to the man from RKO, "If it were not for your company and for the role I played in 'Of Human Bondage,' I'd be on the streets today. Nobody would want me."

Teddy Newton, who played the crippled Teddy Newton, who played the crippled young man in the the New York production of "Dead End," and who is one of Bette Davis' best friends, said of her: "During Bette's first year in Hollywood she was very unhappy. As everyone knows, she was put into roles for which she was very badly suited. Bette realized that if she kept on playing these roles her career might be ruined. She made up her mind to quit Hollywood."

About that time her sister Barbara be-

About that time her sister Barbara began to suffer from a nervous breakdown occasioned by overstudy. Money for doctor bills was badly needed. So Bette, jeopardizing her own career, stayed on with Universal.

We give you a nifty pair of blondes—Carole Lombard and her Palomino gelding.

"You see, it's this way," he explained.
"Bette, being a few years older than Barbara, has taken care of her financially. It was Bette who saw to it that when Barbara was of college age, she had her chance to go to college. Naturally, when Barbara was ill Bette wanted to do everything she could for her.

'As you might suspect, Barbara adores Bette. Last summer when Barbara eloped she chose Bette's wedding anniversary upon which to have her wedding in order that they might always have a double anniversary celebration.

BETTE is one of the kindest-hearted human beings I have ever met. When I first came to Hollywood a few years ago I was horribly lonesome. Then I met I was horribly lonesome. Then I met Bette and Harmon, and after that it was impossible to be lonely. They invited me to their home for week-ends, played golf with me, and treated me in general as if they'd known me all their lives."

Bette has given out very few interviews about her marriage, and a few of the Hollywood writers have been evial. the Hollywood writers have been cruel and inaccurate in writing about it. I remember once how badly Bette was hurt when a writer said that she was supporting her hydrogy and that some time her ing her husband, and that every time he bought her an orchid, he used her own money to buy it for her.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Shortly after Bette's marriage to Harmon, they separated and he went to New York just so that he could build up a reputation for himself as a musician. There were times in New York before Harmon proved himself as a musician when he was close to the years of steams. Harmon proved himself as a musician when he was close to the verge of starvation. Times when he was lucky if he had a sandwich and a cup of coffee to sustain him in that tiny, cold, hall bedroom. Bette knew nothing of all this. Wild horses wouldn't have dragged the information from Harmon. It wasn't until Harmon had returned to Bette that a friend told her the truth.

"Why didn't you tell me?" Bette asked him. But all the time she knew in her heart that if she had been in Harmon's place, she would have done the same place, she would have done the same thing. For these two mad, lovable children are strangely akin. Both of them have the same rigid New England conscience, the same hot pride. Even the crazy presents they give each other are alike.

Bette once bought Harmon a toy orchestra with four little men holding musical instruments made of wood. This toy was kept constantly on Harmon's night table, until one day Bette bought two pink elephants with phosphorus pin-points for eyes. Without Ham's knowing it, she took away the toy orchestra and put the elephants on the night table instead.

In the middle of the night Ham was suddenly aware of those elephant eyes blinking at him. He blinked right back. The elephants didn't disappear. He knew they had no right to be there, so he pretended they weren't.

Next morning he said to Bette, "Listen, darling, wait till I've really earned those D. T.'s by drinking and then those pink elephants will help to reform me," and he and Bette burst into a great gale of laugh-

It's because of these things that people who know her, feel like shaking Bette when she gives out an interview telling how hard-boiled and ruthless she is. Once she admitted, "My bark is worse than she admitted, "My bark is worse than my bite. But I'm so constructed I canmy bite. But I'm so constructed I cannot feel like saying anything about myself by way of praise. I would feel like a fool."

And so this story says it for her. It's high time Bette Davis was exposed.

New Contract

Luise Rainer's new contract with M-G-M is really an achievement. She's been holding out against making any more movies until she was given permission to take five months a year off to do a play in New York. Metro, however, was scared of the idea after the floppolas of so many Hollywood stars on the New York stage. But perseverance won in the end and Luise has the kind of contract she wants and she's very happy, thank you. Chances are she'll appear in a play written for her by Hubby Clifford Odets.

forgotten her stockings. She wore a yellow sport suit with a black silk tailored waist. A small jaunty feather poked up from her coat lapel. The feather, being brown, failed to blend with any part of the outfit. It was a cute touch, but, like Patsy, pert, careless and a little wrong.

Her hair, straight on top, frizzed at the ends, falls out of place, thick, black, stringy. "I should do something about my permanent," she admitted. "I haven't had it washed or set in three weeks. Besides, I hate sitting under dryers. I leave that for the glamor girls.

"They tried to make me glamorous!" she shrieked, amused at the memory. "A make-up man worked three hours on my face, gave me false eyelashes, new eyebrows, everything. I thought I looked swell. You should have seen the rushes. I was worse than ever! So they gave up. A good thing too. It means I can get to the studio a couple of hours later than the glamor girls. All I do is slap powder on my face . . . and I'm ready. I just can't be beautiful."

IN discussing her work, I found nothing of the clown about Patsy Kelly. "I'm slapstick, no matter what I play," she says. "When I have to register a serious love scene I look like a sick cow. Yes, I'm slapstick, but you can be slapstick without throwing a pie. I believe in contrast. "Carole Lombard falling in the gutter is funny. If I do the same thing it means funny. If I do the same thing it means nothing. Let me trip in a place like the Waldorf-Astoria and that's a sure-fire laugh."

She confessed to working hard.
"Four years in Hollywood and I've worked in forty shorts and twenty features." Outside of three days last year, this is my first holiday. I motored from the coast with a friend. It took us ten days to cross the country. I discovered I still have a charmed life. I drove, and in trying to avoid running over a dog, bumped into a talegraph cole turning the car completely. telegraph pole, turning the car completely over. Neither of us were hurt. In Texas of my face was swollen to twice its normal size. I didn't feel any pain so I figured the mirror was wrong! It wasn't. I had an abscessed tooth without pain . . . the charm again!

Patsy is sincere and utterly natural. I arrived before the studio man and the press.

"I'm not used to all this fuss," she said.
"I feel like a high school kid. I wish you'd stick with me."

While we waited we discussed the old days, when I was press agent for a Broadway show, Delmar's "Revels," which had, in its cast, an unknown youngster named Patsy Kelly. The unknown girl had to sing a song. It was one of those serious revue numbers, an excuse for show girls to parade up and down dressed as perfume bottles and jewelry. On one side of the stage sat Patsy Kelly with a singing partner. But she couldn't be serious.

"It was my sick cow look."

Anyway, the number was thrown out, only to appear in another revue, where, sung by Bill Robinson, it became the national hit known as "I Can't Give You Anything But Love"

"It's a wonder they didn't fire me for ruining that song," said Patsy. "That's what I mean by a charmed life."

And we continued to reminisce, I, re-calling the first rehearsal day when I collected the names of the cast, and she had held out her hand and said, "It's Kelly to

"It still is," said Patsy.

"To your fans, too?

"In spades!"

So, if you know your cards, you know that means double!

wondering if she should let herself be kissed. Though at the time, I didn't yet guess the reason for the way it hit me.

Then suddenly she was in high school, and a beauty. Her body took on graceful curves. Her eyes glowed with mystery. Her blue-black hair was under control.

I remember the night I became aware of all this. Mona had got the lead in her class play, and she'd asked me to be her eass piay, and sne'd asked me to be her escort for the evening. She was all excited, not only over the acting, but because there was to be a dance and supper.

Her mother, when I called at the house, told me, "She's almost ready." We heard the tap tag of healt course.

the tap-tap of heels overhead.

Next moment I held my breath. This girl coming down was a princess. Her arms and throat, bare above the chiffon of her dress, were delicately veined marble. She walked with grace.

In her high-heeled slippers, she was taller than I. She made me feel clumsy. Humble, too. In the taxi, I said, "What made you pick on me, Mona? There must have been boys your own age, crazy to take you.

She said scornfully, "Oh, boys! They bore me! They are all right to dance with, but afterwards, I've nothing to say!"

She snuggled against me. "But you're

She snuggled against me. "But you're grown-up, you're almost the rock-of-ages." The dark cloud of her hair was close to my lips. With an effort of will, I controlled myself. "Kidlet," I said gravely, "I hope you still mean that a couple of years from now. Because if you do, I'm going to ask you something."

Womanlike, she knew at once what I meant. Her eyes sparkled. "Ask me now!"

"No," I said, "You're too young. But some day, darling, I mean to ask you to be my wife."
Her eyes were shy now. "Oh, John, that's what I used to tell my dolls I'd be! John . . . " She held up her untouched the best of the blicked and I asked myself what John . . . " She held up her untouched lips to be kissed, and I asked myself what I'd done to deserve such luck.

A year later, I was graduating from medical school and Mona sat beside my father. Afterwards, Dad disappeared, leaving us the car. It was in that old car that I fastened my little pearl-studded fraternity pin on Mona's dress.

"But the waiting isn't over," I warned.

uay a man can call his own. I saw little of Mona and she grew restless. First thing I knew, she was looking for a job.
"I've alway had a passion for the stage," she said, "and now I mean to find out if I'm any good. Even bit parts pay a salary. I'll save it, so we can have a nest egg for a honeymoon."
How could I make an issue of her acting.

a work amous specialist in Vienna wrote and invited me to work with him.

I was thrilled. I rushed to the theatre and tore into Mona's dressing room. "Darling," I cried, "how soon can you marry me? We're going to Europe on our honeymoon."

Mona was lovely about it, excited, but she didn't react as I'd hoped. "Vienna?" she said. "But what in the world would I do in Vienna? I'd be alone. Wouldn't

"You mean, you won't come with me?"

She made it sound less harsh, but that's what she did mean. We argued about it uselessly. "Mona, if you loved me..."

uselessly. "Mona, if you loved me . . ."
"And if you love me, John, you'd let me go on with the work I've learned to love."

I gave in. Mona said we'd waited so long, a few more years wouldn't matter.
And I thought, "She's young. She's reluctant to be rushed into marriage." Since then I've wondered how our life might have turned out had I been stubborn.

The years did not fly, they crept. I buried myself among test tubes. Eve-

She wrote back frequently, but through the tenderness of her words I sensed a new restless excitement. She had been in another hit. She made a short, very bad movie in the Eastern Studios—just for a lark. I went to see that movie in Vienna's newest picture house. The picture had been every bit as bad as Mona warned, but the leading man was handsome, and they seemed to enjoy their clinches.

I went home soon afterwards, but Mona wasn't at the pier to meet my boat. She was in Hollywood, having her first real fling at films. Dad told me about it. About the talent scout spotting her in a Broadway show.

At midnight I called Hollywood, not caring what it cost.

Mona's voice on the wire made my pulses throb. "Darling! I'll be home in three months. Oh, John, do you love me?"

I thought, three more months. Always

She did come home, on schedule. She flew. I met her at the airport. I couldn't believe that at last I held her in my arms. "Beloved," I whispered, "I'll never let you leave me again! I've missed you so."

She said shakily. "I told them at the studio I wouldn't be back for a while."

That meant she was going back eventually. Mona still loved me, but she had had work she wanted to do and a purpose she wouldn't dream of relinquishing. And I couldn't help smiling at her glowing picture of the future. "Don't you see, John— I'll be making money. Some day it will grow into a research fund for you. Just think, me endowing my husband to do great deeds!"

How could she guess that some day this very love of hers would come near to destroying me!

We were married that same day.

I shan't tell you about our honeymoon. It belongs among those precious sacred memories one doesn't air. But in the end it was over, and Hollywood claimed my wife. She was as miserable about going as I was, yet eager, too. "Can't help it, Johnny darling. It's in my blood—and you're in my blood. Lord, what a tangled life I've picked for myself!"

Ah, Grace Bradley, we never would have guessed it. Slacks -to be sure!

Between scenes for her latest picture Shirley Ross has a snack.

We didn't know yet how true that was. For Mona was headed now towards fame, a salary due to grow more fantastic every few months. And I? I was nothing but a good doctor who some day might be tops in his profession—within limits.

Again I was alone. But loneliness was harder to bear, for now I missed, not a dream girl, but a woman of flesh and blood.

dream girl, but a woman of flesh and blood. And jealousy began its insidious torment. Mona flew east between pictures, and every time she tried to reassure me. "Darling, there's nothing to it! The studio insists I go places. After all, a girl can't go to the Brown Derby and the Troc and the races all by herself! The men who take me are good sports, but mainly they're canny." She explained, "They want to be seen too."

"I know, darling. I know motion pictures are a business like any other, and that you must follow rules. But how do I know you won't fall for your leading man?"

SHE was terribly hurt. "How can you even think of such a thing? After all these years when I haven't looked at any other man!"

Yet the fact remained I was nothing but a sandy-haired, average looking man glid-ing towards middle age, and I had no il-lusions about myself. If I'd had, my first visit to Mona in Hollywood would have dispelled them anyway. I shall never for-get that visit, because it was like a bird'seye view of our whole married life. I shall never forget the day I got there. Like Mona, I flew across the continent.

I couldn't afford it as easily as she, but I was impatient to be with her. I had exwas impatient to be with her. I had expected her to come to me, but at the last moment she changed her plans. "Please," she'd written. "Please, darling. I'm so tired. And Malibu Beach will be heaven. Surely you can get away."

So I arranged with a colleague to take care of patients, handed over to him an operation which meant a thousand dollars. I didn't grudge any of it

I didn't grudge any of it.

I remember thinking, as the plane circled over the airport, how clear and brilliant California sunshine really was. Then we were landing. I strained to pick my wife out in the crowd on the field, but she wasn't there. I was sick with disappointment.

The charm of attractive womanhood is made up of many things. Above all, a quality not to be measured merely by birthdays . . . a quality of fresh, sweetly fragrant daintiness, which proper care can assure at any age. With more accuracy than romance, let us call it frankly . . "cleanliness". It means even more than bathand-laundry cleanliness. It means that unsullied personal immaculacy which is the most compelling charm of a lovely young girl, and of truly happy wives. For no husband fails to notice, and resent, any neglect of intimate feminine cleanliness. Yet too many women never realize that the freshness, which is so natural in youth, requires constant care as maturity advances. A cleansing douche with "Lysol" disinfectant, in proper solution of water, is the frequent and regular feminine hygiene habit of fastidious modern women. They know that "Lysol" in solution cleanses thoroughly, deodorizes - dependably. Many hospitals use "Lysol"; many doctors recommend it for feminine hygiene. Complete directions are on every bottle . . . at any druggist's.

You must surely read these six reasons why "Lysol" is recommended for your intimate hygiene-to give you assurance of intimate cleanliness.

1-Non-Caustic... "Lysol", in the proper dilution, is gentle. It contains no harmful free caustic alkali.

2—Effectiveness. "Lysol" is a powerful germicide, active under practical conditions, effective in the presence of organic matter (such as dirt, mucus, serum, etc.).

3-Spreading . . "Lysol" solutions spread because of low surface tension, and thus virtually search out germs.

4—Economy . . . "Lysol", because it is concentrated, costs only about one cent an application in the proper dilution for femiliate havings. feminine hygiene.

5—Odor ... The cleanly odor of "Lysol" disappears after use.

6-Stability . . . "Lysol" keeps its full strength no matter how long it is kept, no matter how often it is uncorked.

The usual detail of newspaper men and photographers looked us over and decided none of us were worth bothering with. They were turning away when a limousine drove up. Mona jumped out of it and ran towards me, calling my name.

"John! The studio called a conference and . . . Darling, will you forgive me for being late?" Instantly, the press snapped to attention. Cameras clicked. We were rather Mona was—the center of attentions. or rather Mona was-the center of attention.

I wanted to ignore them. But Mona, having learned about the behavior of a young star, pacified me. "Sorry, sweet." She was nice to them. "I'd catch hell from the studio if I tried to high-hat the press."

Oh, it wasn't being kept out that burned me up! What does a doctor want with publicity, anyway? It was their attitude. How would you like to be told that for your own wife to be seen with you is bad business.

That whole visit was a nightmare. In the first place, Mona's week of rest was can-celled, so that on my very first day in the film capital she went to work. I went with her. She said it might be fun. Fun! Throughout the afternoon I stood watching her kiss the same man again and again while a director shouted, "More passion, Miss Carne!" Finally I walked away. didn't enjoy those kisses. But I never returned to the set. I said the lights hurt my eyes.

There were other things. There was the party Mona gave for me. A madhouse of extravagance. Everyone in the room was extravagance. Everyone in the room was a Name, the huge off-white living room was a perfect setting for Names, and it was my wife's home and I was a stranger in it.

Oh, she tried to tell them I was the guest of honor, but I was only a movie star's husband. I had nothing to contribute to the talk. They talked shop, and the only shop talk I knew was science. Theories shop talk I knew was science. Theories and formulas. Some day they might benefit humanity, but they are pretty deadly in a drawing room.

I left at the end of the week. It wasn't until I was back in New York, not until the hospital with which I'm connected telephoned for advice on an urgent case, that began to feel my self-respect coming back. Oh, it was good to know I was useful, a necessary cog in the machine of life.

I made several visits to Hollywood after that, but mostly I tried to have Mona come to New York. "The commuting couple," columnists named us.

Mona's visits to me were more successful Mona's visits to me were more successful than mine to her, because in New York even a film star can be squired about without too much ballyhoo. But it wasn't like old times. I wanted to do sentimental things like taking a boat to Coney Island, like lunch at the Automat. Mona said that was out. "A star can't afford that kind of slumming. Besides, I'd be mobbed by autograph hunters!"

Oh yes, she was a full-fledged star now.

Her salary had risen to five thousand dollars a week when, during a whole year of practice, I was lucky if I cleared ten!

WHAT could I offer her? The enormous star sapphire on her engagement finger she'd bought herself. It practically hid the platinum band I'd put there once. She said, "That's good. The public doesn't like to be reminded I'm an old married woman."

ried woman."

And yet, through all the misery, our love lived on. Each time we parted, we clung to each other like lost children. And it was sweet to know that I was as dear to my wife as she was to me.

Once she whispered, "You're still—my rock of ages. I don't know what I'd do without you. Everything else—Hollywood, success, fame—they're grand, of course. But only because you're there in the background. only because you're there in the background, loving me. If ever I lose you, everything else will be—well, just the glitter that isn't gold."

about sanitary napkins!

Here are the questions women asked:

Is there a way for me to secure greater Comfort and Security?

> Suppose my needs differ on different days . . . what can I do?

What kind of deodorant should I use for positive protection?

Here are the answers to your questions!

WOMEN know that the ideal sanitary napkin is one that can't chafe, can't fail, can't show. So, naturally, this was our goal. With the introduction of Wondersoft Kotex,* we were confident we had achieved it!

But to be honest, even though Wondersoft Kotex did create new standards of comfort and safety for most women, it did not completely satisfy every woman! Fortunately, we found out why . . . We discovered that one-size napkin will not do for every woman, any more than one-size hat, dress or pair of shoes. And, for many women, one-size napkin will not do for every day, for a woman's personal needs may differ on different days.

To meet this problem, we developed 3 types of Kotex . . . for different women, different days. Only Kotex has "All 3" . . . Regular Kotex, Junior Kotex, Super Kotex.

We sincerely believe that these 3 types of Kotex answer your demands for sanitary protection that meets your exact needs, each day. We urge you to try "All 3" next time, and see how they can bring you the greater comfort and security you seek.

Try all 3 types of Kotex, then judge for yourself. The proof is in the wearing! Perhaps you will decide you want one type for today, another for tomorrow or maybe all 3 types for different times.

Quest is the new positive deodorant powder that is completely effective on sanitary napkins. Only 35c for the large size.

being tortured by that fear. I cried, "If only we needn't spend most of our lives apart! If only there were some way. . . ."

That's when she had an idea. "But John, maybe there is a way! A good doctor is necessary—wherever he happens to be . . ."

I didn't understand at once. She went on, "Come to Hollywood. Open an office there. Even in Hollywood people get sick, you know. Why not?"

Why not, indeed? It was so simple we might have known there was a catch to it.

My father was frankly dubious. "A doctor should stick to the hospital where he's doing effective work. Do you want to become a fashionable dispenser of pills?"

We laughed, and since Dad believed you can't stop a man from making his own mistakes, he said no more. It wasn't six months before I acknowledged how right

Because practice in Hollywood-and I was successful in a big way once the movie colony took up Mona Carne's husband as its official healer, was a farce. No time for days given freely to work in a clinic, now. No time for research. Instead, there were endless private calls, the kind a good doctor can easily settle over the telephone.

But the stars wanted attention, personal and undivided. They wanted flattery. And I, hating myself, gave it. Because I knew that if I didn't, they'd stop calling me in and then once again I'd only be a drag on Mona.

No, we didn't find happiness through living under the same roof. Mona still kept going out with more spectacular men. And while she danced, I'd go to the home of some other languid lady, summoned on an urgent call.

Half the time there was nothing the matter with the patient. "I've got the jitters, Dr. Murdock. What does science prescribe in a case like that. Could a cocktail for two be the cure?"

I writhed inwardly. At first I'd thought my own studies might be of some use, because stars are women too, and women have babies, and whether you're rich or poor the suffering is the same.

But even that wasn't so. They didn't have babies, they adopted them. The studios advised it. Why, a great star's time and popularity were too precious.

Once, I had dreamed that the crowning achievement of my career would be to help Mona bring our own son painlessly into the world. But she had other ideas.

Can you understand that my nerves cracked under the strain? A doctor, like a musician or an engineer, requires constant practice of his best faculties. Mine were seedy. I became obsessed with a fear that if I were faced with some complicated case, I would fail.

MY father died, leaving me the big brownstone house in New York, and little else, except a touching letter of fare-well. He ended it with these lines. "Remember, son, what a great poet said. 'To thine own self be true. Thou canst not then be false to any man.'"

I knew well what he meant. And Mona leave too. Tears came into her eyes. "Oh knew, too. Tears came into her eyes. "Oh John," she said. "It is true, isn't it? Everything's my fault. I've made you—be untrue—to yourself."

I took her in my arms and let her sob against my shoulder. Yet I couldn't find it in my heart to say the words which would have soothed her.

And then, like a bombshell, another letter came. It was from the famous specialist in Vienna whose pupil I had once been. He was coming to the United States, to work for several years in one of those imposing endowed institutions of science which are the wonder of the rest of the

He wanted me to work with him. He said, "You're a young man, John Murdock, and you will carry on where I leave off. There is so much to do, and not enough men to do it."

My big chance. Not much glory in it, certainly no money beyond a living wage. But oh, the thing every man wants most-achievement.

But there was the other side of the picture. Gone would be my comparative "equality" with my wife. No more expensive, shiny Hollywood doctor's office. No more jaunts across country at thousands of dollars a throw. Only work.

I showed that letter, also to my wife. We talked it over quietly. She cried desperately, "But John, where would there be, in your new life, room for—us? For me?" I said gravely, "There's always room for you. You are my life." But she shook her head.

"No, if you go away, it'll be the end.
Not at once, perhaps. But sometime. I feel it."

"And if I stay?" I asked her.
She buried her face in her hands. "I know," she moaned. "If you stay, it will be the end, too. You couldn't forgive me for keeping you to work that isn't worthy of you. And I don't think I could love a man who wasn't true to himself."

It is a week now since that letter has

It is a week now since that letter has been lying on my desk. I don't know how to answer it. We've searched for the solution. Driving in the sunlight, we've tried to see into the future. Lying close in the night, we've tried. And always, we go round in a circle, and in the end the riddle is still the same. is still the same.

If I turn down that offer, I'll become a Hollywood husband for good, a failure in my own mind. Mr. Mona Carne. If I accept it, it will mean the end of our mar-

Because sooner or later Mona will slip away from me. She mayn't think so now. But glamor and success have their lure. Men will court her. And in the end one of them will win out. I might as well admit I know it.

What are we to do, then? Please write to me and tell me, you who read this! We've thought so much we can't think for ourselves any more! Have we reached an impasse? We're both career people, Mona and I. We both love our work. Should I sacrifice my own to hers? Can I be a man and do this? Perhaps your letters will decide for me, one way or another.

I said, "Let's unroll the tape measure and begin. You know, you measure a child every so often to take stock of development, if any. Why not a star? Let's begin with the face."

"Oh, let's not!" laughed Claudette. "You'll go deuces wild with that tape measure if you try to make my face conform to movie measurements with it. Experts have tried and failed. It needs a lot of doing, that's the bare fact about my face. Too broad across the eyes, too narrow across the chin. Nose wrong. I my face. Too broad across the eyes, too narrow across the chin. Nose wrong. I have no illusions about my face. I have to have careful lighting, careful make-up if I am trying to look glamorous, which I seldom am. I must play parts which call for changes of expression, vivacity, using the play and mobility of feature which will distract attention from the tape-measure deficiencies." deficiencies.

So the tape measure was out. It would get hopelessly snarled if used on Claudette. She doesn't match, and when you add up the contradictions, you have a provoca-tive personality, all the more provocative because it cannot be card-indexed, tagged, trade-marked.

Claudette perceived the pitiful little wad into which the tape measure had been rolled and she helped me out. Which is also characteristic and the one undeniable consistency among the contradictions of Claudette, her desire to help out, her practicality when she does help out. As when someone is ill, for instance, some worker in the studio, perhaps. She doesn't spill over and send large gobs of fancy flowers.

er, women who are truly charming can marry at any age.

She sends bowls of strong soup, bottles of strengthening wine, things that will do substantial good, not just attract the eye, and the attention.

She doesn't spill over in any way. She will not discuss her husband, her marriage, will not discuss her husband, her marriage, her private life for publication. She doesn't spill over in her friendships, either. She doesn't spread her affections thinly, calling chance acquaintances "darling," inviting the crowd to "drop in, any time." She has never had an uninvited guest in her home. No one has ever just "dropped in." She invites her friends to come to dinner on Wednesday evening the 18th, at 8 o'clock and that is when they come, and only when they come.

And because contradictions embroider the firm foundation of the Colbert character, she is, also, informal. She likes to have daytime guests because they can play have daytime guests because they can play tennis, jump in the pool, be out of doors; she likes to wear slacks and forget makeup. She has only a few friends but the few are her intimate friends, without reservations. And she is fiercely loyal to them. A friend of Claudette's would just about have to run the gamut of sheer viciousness before she could be made to dishelieve in him or her. She is "crazy" disbelieve in him, or her. She is "crazy about Carole Lombard"; she is "terribly fond of Roccy and Gary Cooper," a handful of others.

So, now, she came to my aid. She said, "I'll tell you one thing your tape measure would not have found in me, measure as it might, and that's an inferiority complex. I haven't one." She is, she added, awfully bored with inferiority complexes, with people, nine out of every ten, who announce that they suffer from this epidemic malady which is, one would assume, more malady which is, one would assume, more common than the common cold. She said, "I never had a terrific inferiority at any time. I always knew that I would get along, whatever I did." (She still knows so. She is confident that, had she not gone on the stage but had, instead, done dress designing, as she planned, she would have been successful. For Claudette believes that if a person is at all successful lieves that if a person is at all successful, in any thing, it's reasonable to suppose that they have the stuff of success in them.)

them.)

"I did have a terrific shyness," Claudette was saying. "I was inhibited. I was stiff. I couldn't let myself go. That was the result of my French upbringing. For a French girl is, you know, trained never to show any emotion of any kind, for any reason. Naturally, when I was projected from that sheltered background plant into the stage of all places. I froze. plunk into the stage, of all places, I froze. More so when I first went into pictures. I felt so self-conscious. It seemed to me that I was living all my life, my most intimate moments and emotions, in front job now. It is, after all, highly technical, and technique can be learned. The emotions you build, the reactions you try to get, are like pieces of a puzzle, and once you have learned the trick of putting the pieces together, you have that feeling of competency which is self-confidence.

"Does having achieved self-confidence

mean that you never worry now?

"No!" laughed Claudette, that rich silk laugh of hers, "I worry about everything. A curl out of place, the way a piece of furniture is placed on the set. I used to worry about my health, but having a doctor-husband takes care of that. They had a lot of fun with us on the set of had a lot of fun with us on the set of 'Tovarich,' Charles Boyer and me, because Charles is, if anything, a better worrier than I am."

And here, again, a contradiction in the Colbert composite. For she is, she insists in the next breath, always optimistic about the future. She will always gamble with futures. She told how she onced moved from a small apartment into a very large, swank one without the faintest idea of where the next month's rent was coming from. But that was the next month. Something would turn up.

"I worry about my work now, today this hour," she said. "For the future, well, I know what I want to do. I'd like to be on the correct what Inc. Claims in the correct ways to the correct what Inc. Claims in the correct ways the correct ways to the correct ways the correct ways the correct ways to the correct ways the corre to be, on the screen, what Ina Claire is on the stage. I want to do the same sort of sophisticated comedy. For sophisticated comedy is ageless. And comedy is the only sophisticated way, I believe, in which age can be bridged over. That's why I'm so pleased about 'Bluebeard's Eighth Wife.' It was one of Ina Claire's plays.'

She is, she says, no business woman at all, again in spite of her fundamental practicality. She never sees her own checks, doesn't know the color of them. And as for lists of stocks, and income tax blanks and the like, they might as well, she laughed, "be the funny sheets!"

She enjoys fame and the rewards thereof, enjoys faine and the rewards incre-of, enjoys being recognized, applauded, as any normal, healthy-minded person does, if the truth is told. "I enjoy it," Claud-ette said, "except on the occasions, very rare, when I want to get away, let down my hair, have nothing on my face and can't But even when she does go away she keeps her hair up, doesn't wear smoked glasses, doesn't try to palm herself off as Miss Brown from the Middle West.

SHE isn't temperamental. She does have a quick temper, and it is, she told me, "like milk soup, which boils up quickly and turiously and subsides just as immediately." She detests shopping for clothes . gets around it by buying an entire season's wardrobe at one time, in one place. She is extravagant only about houses, always has been. She has built her home in Bel Air, Georgian and gracious, and she says, "I go crazy, buying things for the house." Her hobby is 18th Century china. English, not French. Century china, English, not French.
She is easily influenced by the moods of others. She is easily hurt, easily offended, supersensitive. She is more cynical than trusting. She says, "I never take people on faith. I am suspicious of everybody."

She is exacting with the people who work for her, fair but exacting, expecting them to know their jobs and to do them. She is equally exacting with herself. She isn't neat. She added, amused, "I'm terribly neat if somebody does it for me, and somebody always does. My mother has spoiled me in that way.

"I'm always late for appointments and I don't mean ten minutes late, either. I can't bear to be alone. I even invite someone to lunch with me here on the set every day because I can't be alone. I'm gregarious to the extent that I have to have someone with me all the time, one or two people, not a crowd. I'm a terribly routine person, too. I seldom go away. I haven't taken a trip in over four years. The trip Jack and I are about to take to Europe will be my first in four years."

And right here, Ernst Lubitsch came in, asked Claudette about the pronunciation of a French word, and said, "We are ready for rehearsal, please."

And Claudette, without a glance at the mirror, left, saying, "I think that if you had measured Lily Cauchoin, you would have found all of the same qualities, with the exception of the one—self-assurance.

Acting is as effortless for her as breathing. In the family O'Brien (Jane's name was changed to Bryan by Warners to avoid confusion with Pat O'Brien on theatre marquees), there is no trace of that histrionic urge which possesses Jane. Unless her mother's flare for elocution might have a suggestion of it.

L ONG before Jane was into her teens, her parents recognized that they had an embryo actress on their hands. Even the three younger brothers early realized that this sister of theirs was something very special.

It must be the singular alchemy of the Gaelic blood which drove Jane relentlessly in her single-track devotion to the stage. For never once in all her nineteen years has Jane swerved from her one ambition to be an actress.

Very recently May Robson said to her, "What would you do if you had to give up acting?" "I wouldn't give up acting," was Jane's definite reply.

Jane is shy and hesitant as she discusses her brief past and her schoolday venturings into drama.

"Those performances in the attic went on for years," she recalls. "The plays were extemporaneous and it depended on my mood whether I was the princess in the tower, the villain who held her there, or the hero who rescued her. Mother stopped worrying about my periodic disappearances eventually. She knew that I was off somewhere strutting on imaginary stages and reducing phantom audiences to inarticulate admiration of my performance.

"I was in a class play or two at Marymount Convent, but important vistas opened to me when I entered University High School. Here were drama classes, a dramatic coach, plays to be given, scenery to be painted—in short, the theatre.

"The only trouble was that I always talked out of turn. I'd be chosen for an important part in a play, and then the coach and I would disagree as to the interpretation of the role. Or perhaps I felt the timing was wrong in the delivery of lines.

"I would wave my hands and scream, 'It shouldn't be done that way, it isn't right,' and before I knew it, someone else was in my part, and I found myself making the announcements before the curtain went up.

"When high school was over, I thought to myself, 'Now at last, I can go out and be an actress.' I had only vague notions of how I was going to do it, but I thought a good beginning would be with a term in some good dramatic school.

"Very gently I made the suggestion to the family. But my mother and dad had other plans for me. They felt that a course at the University, which was within a stone's throw of our house, was indicated. "So we made a bargain. I lacked half a credit in algebra for University admission. If I would work off that required entrance credit, I could also at the same time attend Jean Muir's experimental theatre. I would have six whole months to test myself. If no exceptional talents were discovered by the teachers in that time, I was to be a good girl and go on with my education."

So in exchange for that one hour of drudgery at algebra, Jane received the fulsome delight of classes in drama, dancing and fencing, stage-setting and costuming. Miss Muir's school had an excellent staff, and Jane received invaluable training.

IN February of 1936, "Green Grow the Lilacs" was chosen by the Theatre Workshop for presentation. Lynn Riggs, the author, was in Hollywood, under contract to a major studio, and he was sufficiently interested to undertake the direction of his own play.

One of the most accomplished musicians in Hollywood, Warner Baxter, entertains Loretta Young and Director Walter Lang at the piano.

Arnow, then casting director at Warners Arnow, then casting director at Warners and said, "I wish you'd go down to Jean Muir's school. They're giving 'Green Grow the Lilacs.' There's a girl called Jane O'Brien in it. She's a natural, if I've ever seen one."

Mr. Arnow promptly attended. No possible bets are ever passed up in Hollywood by talent scouts and casting directors.

A week later, Jane was invited to make a screen test. She chose the love scene from "Green Grow the Lilacs." And on March 9, 1936, she signed a long-term contract. But before becoming a full-time actress, Jane finished her algebra and her. workshop course.

"If things didn't work out," she says, "I wanted to be able to have that algebra credit so I could go to college. Otherwise, I wouldn't have kept my part of the bargain with Dad and Mother."

Jane was cast in two pictures in unim-portant roles. Did this child really have it? Was she really a natural actress? Did she possess that undefinable, intangible quality which every fine actress must have?

quality which every fine actress must have?

In her first few days on the set, she proved that she had it. She took to acting before the camera like a duck to water.

Long before "Marked Woman" was released, in which she played the role of Bette Davis' younger sister, Bette said to me, "There is a girl whom you must know. She is one of those rare things, a natural actress. Watch her.

"She goes into a scene as if she were hypnotized; as if she were following directions, taking orders from some unseen power. It's uncanny."

Jane is still wide-eyed with delight at

Jane is still wide-eyed with delight at her break and she is now intent on justifying the faith of the studio and her sponsors in her.

"I hope I'll be given a lot of little sister roles," she declares. "I prefer not to carry the love interest in a picture, for I still don't believe I'm sufficiently mature emotionally to do it."

Her special request now is, "No love, please," applied equally to her personal life and her screen life.

Her interests are diverse. Reading, tennis and walking and hunting, with Phil Kellogg, a cutter on her home lot, as her companion.

Jane's special enthusiasm centers around her three brothers: Jim, seventeen, Billie, fourteen, and Don, eleven. "Billie," she confides, "is going to be a real actor some day. He has that special something."

Mary Garden visits MacDonald on the set of "Girl of The Golden West," the musical score of which is said to be sumpin'!

The only drawback to the young brothers is that their important activities keep Jane broke buying uniforms or footballs or camp paraphernalia for whole groups at a time.

"And then I have to borrow from the boys for my own spendin' change. But I have to pay it back the following week—so there's no week when I'm not financially embarrassed."

In a town indifferent to its local talent. Jane Bryan, a Los Angeles product living in the shadow of motion picture studiosdaughter of a prominent attorney-has through luck and talent made an excellent bid for fame!

$1.00 Prize Letter More Drama For Claire

I saw a grand picture, "Dead End". I saw those boys make those "Dead End" hoodlums startlingly real, Joel McCrea ignite another brilliant light along his movie road of success, Sylvia Sydney add another impressive portrayal to her preceding ones as did Humphrey Bogart. But I also saw an actress do with her tiny role also saw an actress do with her tiny role what the stars did with theirs. I mean Claire Trevor as Francey.

I've seen Claire in numerous films before, but her roles never allowed the verve she put into her performance as Francey. At last a part, if small, into which she could get her teeth and prove she is as good as Hollywood's best dramatic stars!

Claire should no longer be cast in supor Claire should no longer be cast in support to some star but as the star in a Class A production like "Dead End". The emotion and vitality she put into Francey should be rewarded with a starring role for Claire.—Josephine Crutcher, So. Boca Grande, Florida.

$1.00 Prize Letter Shirley, the Kid Sister

Ever since the day I made public my admiration for Shirley Temple, I have been the victim of an abundance of kidding. I the victim of an abundance of kidding. I pretend to be able to take it but inside it hurts. Because in kidding me, my friends say things about her that to me seem mean.

Being a lad in my late teens, I regard Shirley as I would a kid sister. My love for her is something far deeper than mere fan worship. I like to imagine her as one of my dearest friends because I feel that I know her as well as anyone. Whenever I read or hear mean and catty little things about her I wonder how people can possibly have any love in their hearts and still criticize the little girl who stands for everything that is good and right.

Her beauty, ability and genius are something for the whole world to love and respect, as I do. But Shirley, as a little child I have prayed to some day walk and talk with as a true friend, is the little girl I have grown to love.—Bill Dawkins. St. Albans, N. Y.

Turn to our Scoreboard when you're in doubt about what movie to see. It's a valuable guide in choosing entertainment. Instead of giving the individual ratings of Modern Screen and authoritative newspaper movie critics all over the country, we have struck an average of their ratings. You'll find this average under General Rating, beside each picture. 4*, very good: 3*, good: 2*, fair; 1*, poor. Asterisk denotes that only Modern Screen ratings are given on films not reviewed by newspapers as we go to press.

Beautiful, blue-eyed and blonde, Phyllis Brooks proves Hollywood is sometimes very slow to recognize talent. Phyllis was a model for several noted artists until her picture in a toothpaste advertisement caught the eye of film scouts who gave her a screen test. The roles that fell her way dissatisfied Phyl, and, refusing a renewal of her screen contract, she left for New York and the stage. She was given the coveted role of second lead in the Broadway production of "Stage Door". The favorable criticism she received again brought a film contract this time with 20th Century-Fox. And now, watch Miss B, for she's rocketing to stardom. Her new picture is Walking Down Broadway".

meet Stu Erwin you would find he has a charm that is friendly and direct.

If you were twice as lucky and had a chance to visit him in his home, you would find your first impression backed up a hunfind your first impression backed up a nundred per cent. More than likely the door of that hospitable, rambling Spanish home would be opened by Stu himself. The whole house breathes the spirit of hospitality right to the "play-house" at the back where you would probably be taken for some fun. Maybe it would be for games with the children, around whom the lives of June and Stu revolve. There's Bill, of June and Stu revolve. There's Bill, who's almost six. Bill is really named Stu, Jr., and his dark eyes hold the same twinkle as the eyes of his famous dad. June Dorothea is three.

Or perhaps it would just be chatting and sipping a drink in front of the huge, open fireplace of the comfortable room.

You'd certainly hear about Stu's prizewinning dogs. He has two bulldogs, a Doberman Pinscher and six scotties—one of which, Craghaven Clinker, is a national champion. "And being in the dog house isn't half bad," Stu will tell you. "My purps have showerbaths, summachines, in the state of private rooms and a special patio in theirs.

AND you might hear of the latest shopping expedition which Stu and June went on. June loves clothes—and Stu, believe it or not, could win Hollywood's Best Dressed Man contest if he bothered to enter the race. You'd exploit enter the race. You'd probably hear about Santa Anita, and the gay places they had been lately. For they're beautifully ballanced people, these Erwins, believing in enjoying the world as much as they do the contentment of home. contentment of home.

And particularly you'd love the stories which Stu tells on himself and on his favorite actress, June Collyer. Which brings to mind one which June told us once on her favorite actor. Stu had been telling about visiting Bill in kindergarten. "This modern education gets me" he said "This modern education gets me," he said.
"The curriculum for children seems to consist of drinking orange juice, taking naps and playing games and then drinking more orange juice. It's no doubt all right, but methods have certainly changed since my day."

"Perhaps it's just as well," mused Mrs.
Erwin, and then told this experience of the discontinual methods of his Stu's with the educational methods of his day. Stu was in fourth grade at the time, and his teacher just couldn't break him of the habit of saying "I have went home." She told Stu to remain after school and write on the blackboard "I have gone home" one hundred times. Having finished the assignment, Stu left a note on the desk.

"Dear Teacher. I followed your instruc-tions. And I have went home. Stuart."
Stu gave his first Hollywood party, oddly enough, in New York City. It was eight years ago, on his first trip there. He had only a tiny apartment rented for his stay, and after fitting chairs up to the table, decided he could invite twenty. Ninety ar-Victor Moore, playing in a musical show at the time, brought his whole com-

Stu is as unaffected as was Will Rogers -to whom he bears a striking resemblance in manner and philosophy. There is the same easy acceptance of human frailties, the kind-hearted twist to every observation.

Will Rogers wasn't afraid to be simple, either. Only men of big hearts dare to pass up the affectations and emphasize the humanness of their characters. Will Rogers knew that people loved his homely heart. And Stu Erwin knows that long ago he was right in charting his course along the route that was honestly human. The years since have proved it—and the years to come will bring more evidence to play on the fact that Stu Erwin was smart when he chose to be dumb.
